LEASES are conditional conveyances; species of contracts for the possession and profits of lands and tenements, either for life or for a certain term of years, or during the pleasure of the parties. A lease is a contract for the possession and profits of lands and tenements on the one side, and a recompense of rent or other income on the other.[a]

One of the essential properties of a lease is that its duration must be for a shorter period than the duration of the interest of the lessor in the land; for if he disposes of his entire interest it becomes an assignment, and is not a lease. In other words, the granting of a lease always supposes that the grantor reserves to himself a reversion in the leased premises.

The party who leases is called the lessor; he to whom the lease is made, the lessee; and the compensation or consideration of the lease is the rent.

WHAT MAY BE LEASED. Anything corporeal or incorporeal lying in livery or in grant, may be the subject-matter of a lease; and, therefore, not only lands and houses, but commons, ways, fisheries, franchises, annuities, rent charges, and all other incorporeal hereditaments, are included in the common law rule.[b] Goods, chattels, or live-stock may also be leased, and although rent cannot technically be said to issue out of these, the contract for its payment is good, and an action for rent in arrear may be maintained on such leases.[c]

WHO MAY LEASE. All persons in possession of lands and tenements may grant leases of them, unless they are under some legal disability; as a-Bac. Abr. Lease. b-Shepp. Touchst. 268; 23 Penn. St. 106; 3 N. Y. 151; 1 Root, 308. See 1 Washb. Real Prop. 310. c-Co. Litt. 57, a; 3 Hen. & M. 470; 31 Penn. St. 20.

unsound mind, immature age, or the like:[d] and in case of many of these disabilities, the leases are voidable merely, and not void.[e] But it is essential to the validity of a lease that the lessor has, at the time he undertakes to make the grant, possession of the premises, otherwise whatever he does will amount to nothing more than the assignment of a chose in action.[f] But, unless there is an adverse holding, possession will be deemed to follow the ownership; and although a lease may not be sufficient to authorize a lessee to demand possession for the want of a possessory title in his lessor, it will still operate by way of estoppel, and inure to his benefit if the lessor afterwards comes into possession of the land before the expiration of the lease.[g]

The power to lease will of course depend upon the extent of the lessor's estate in the premises; and if he has but an estate for life, his lease can only be co-extensive therewith; when, for a term of years, its commencement, as well as its termination, must be ascertained, for certainty in these respects is of the essence of a term of years. But although this term may not at first appear to be certain, it may be rendered so by reference to some fact or event; as, if a lease be made to a man for so many years as he has in the manor of Dale, and he happens to have a term of two years in that manor, the lease will be good for that period.[h]

In all cases of uncertain duration, or if no time has been agreed upon for the continuance of the term, or if after the expiration of a term the tenant continues to hold over, without any effort on the part of the landlord to remove him, the tenancy is at the will of either party; and it remains at will until after the payment and receipt of rent on account of a new tenancy, or until the parties concur in some other act which recognizes the existence of a tenancy, from which event it becomes a tenancy from year to year. After this, neither party has a right to terminate it before the expiration of the current year upon which they have entered, nor then without having first given reasonable notice to the other party of his intention to do so.[i]

TERMINATION OF LEASE. A lease may be terminated otherwise than by forfeiture before the prescribed period, if the premises are required to be taken for public uses or improvements, or the subject-matter of the lease wholly perishes, or is turned into a house of ill-fame.[j] The same result will follow when the tenant purchases in fee, or the fee descends to him as heir in law; for in either case the lease is merged in the inheritance: since there would be a manifest inconsistency in allowing the same person to hold two distinct estates immediately expectant on the other, while one of them includes the time of both, thus uniting the two opposite characters of landlord and tenant.[k] See LEASE FORMS, post.

LEASE FORMS.

Leases are made either by parol or in writing, but no particular form of expression is required in any case to create an immediate demise.[l] Any permissive holding is, in fact, sufficient for the purpose, and it may be contained in any written memorandum by which it appears to have been the intention of one of the parties voluntarily to dispossess himself of the premises for any given period, and of the other to assume the possession for the same period.[m] Any general description will suffice to pass the leased premises, if it be capable of distinct ascertainment and identification. Whatever words are sufficient to explain the intent of the parties, that the one shall divest himself of the possession, and the other come into it, for a determinate time, are of themselves sufficient, and will, in construction of law, amount to a lease, as well as if the most proper and pertinent words had been made use of for that purpose.[n] And inaccuracies as to qualities, names, amounts, etc., will be rejected, if there is enough to make the purposes and intentions of the parties certain.[o]

The formal parts of a lease in writing are:

1. The introduction, which may include the date.

THE DATE, which will fix the time for its commencement, unless some other period is specified in the instrument itself for this purpose; but if there is no date, or an impossible one, the time will be considered as having commenced from the delivery of the lease.[p]

2. The premises, which include:

1. THE NAMES OF THE PARTIES; and the law knows but one Christian name; and therefore the middle letter of the name of either party is immaterial, and a person may always show that he is as well known by one name as another.[q]

2. THE CONSIDERATION must appear, although it need not be what is technically called rent, or a periodical render of compensation for the use of the premises; but it may be a sum in gross, or the natural affection which one party has for the other. It may also consist in grain, animals, or the personal services of the lessee.[r]

3. THE DESCRIPTION OF THE PREMISES need not specify all the particulars of the subject-matter of the lease, for the accessories will follow the principal thing named; thus the garden is parcel of a dwelling-house, and the general description of a farm includes all the houses and lands appertaining to the farm.[s] But whether certain premises are parcel to those leased or not is always matter of evidence.[t]

3. The habendum.
4. The reddendum.
5. Condition or proviso.
6. The covenants.
7. The conclusion.
8. The signatures (and seals where required by law) of the grantors. And where the covenants in the lease are mutual both parties must sign.
9. Attestation of witnesses, when required by law.
10. The acknowledgment, when required by statute, as where the term is years.

The rights and liabilities of the respective parties are regulated by law, in the absence of any particular agreement in respect thereto: but express covenants are usually inserted in a lease for the purpose of limiting or otherwise defining their rights and duties in relation to repairs, taxes, insurance, renewals, residence on the premises, modes of cultivation, fixtures and the like.

In every well-drawn lease provision is made for a forfeiture of the term in case the tenant refuses to pay rent, commits waste, or is guilty of a breach of the covenant to repair, insure, reside on the premises, or the like. This clause enables the lessor or his assigns to re-enter, in any such event, upon the leased premises and eject the tenant, leaving both parties in the same condition as if the lease were a nullity; but in the absence of a proviso for re-entry, the lessor would possess no such power, the mere breach of a covenant enabling him to sue for damages only.[u] The forfeiture will generally be enforced by the courts, except where the landlord's damages are a mere matter of computation, and can be readily compensated by money.[v] But in the case of a forfeiture for the non-payment of rent, the proviso is allowed to operate simply as a security for rent, and the tenant will be relieved from its effects at any time by paying the landlord, or bringing into court the amount of all arrears of rent, with interest and costs.

That neither the right given in this lease, to said party of the first part, to collect the rent that may be due under the terms of this lease by sale, nor any proceedings under the same, shall in any way affect the right of said party of the first part to declare this lease void and the term hereby created ended, as above provided upon default made by said party of the second part.

That said party of the first part hereby waives his right to any notice from said party of the second part, of his election to declare this lease at an end, under any of its provisions, or any demand for the payment of rent, or the possession of premises leased herein; but the simple fact of the non-payment of the rent reserved shall constitute a forcible entry and detainer as aforesaid.

That said party of the second part shall not remove any buildings or other improvements from said premises without written consent of said party of the first part.

That the said second party shall pay and discharge all costs and attorney's fees and expenses that shall arise from enforcing the covenants of this indenture by the party of the first part.

MORTGAGES are conditional conveyances; conveyances of estates or property by way of pledge, for the security of debt, and to become void on payment of it.[m] It is an estate created by a conveyance absolute in form, but intended to secure the performance of some act (generally specified in the conveyance as the condition, etc.), such as the payment of money, and the like, by the grantor or some other person, and to become void if the act is performed agreeably to the terms prescribed (in the conveyance or) at the time of making such conveyance.[n]

All kinds of property, real or personal, which are capable of an absolute sale, may be the subject of a mortgage; rights in remainder and reversion, franchises and choses in action, may, therefore, be mortgaged. But a mere possibility or expectancy, as that of an heir, cannot.[o]

Both real and personal property may be mortgaged, and in substantially the same manner, except that a mortgage being in its nature a transfer of title, the laws respecting the necessity of possession of personal property and the nature of instruments of transfer being different, require the transfer and conveyance to be made differently in the two cases.

Mortgages are to be distinguished from sales with a contract for repurchase; the distinction is important,[p] but turns rather upon the evidence in each case than upon any general rule of distinction.[q]

A mortgage differs from a pledge; the general property passes by a mortgage, whilst by a pledge only the possession, or at most, a special property passes. Possession is inseparable from the nature of a pledge, but is not necessary to a mortgage.[r]

TRANSFER OF PERSONAL PROPERTY by way of mortgage is a common class of transfers on condition, and is regulated by statute. A mortgage of personal property, like that of real estate, may (in the absence of a statute otherwise) consist of an absolute bill of sale; and a separate instrument of defeasance given at the same time.[s] And although the bill of sale is absolute, and no writing of defeasance is given back, parol testimony is still admissible to prove that it was intended only as collateral security.[t] It is well settled that mortgages of personal property need not be under seal.[u] In the absence of stipulations to the contrary, the mortgagee of personal property has the legal title thereto, and the right of possession; and he may have an action against any one taking them from the mortgagor.[v] And parol proof is not admissible to show an agreement that the mortgagor should remain in possession, the mortgage itself being silent upon the subject.[w] And although the mortgage contains an express stipulation that the mortgagor shall remain in possession until default of payment, and with a power to sell for the mortgage debt, the mortgagee may nevertheless sustain trover against an officer attaching the goods as the property of the mortgagor.[x] As between the mortgagor and mortgagee, a mortgage is valid, although there be no delivery of the property, and no possession by the mortgagee, or deposit of the mortgage in the proper office for record.[y] But as to creditors, subsequent purchasers and mortgagees in good faith, the mortgagee must have and retain the possession of the mortgaged property, or the mortgage acknowledged, must be recorded in the proper office in the county in which the property conveyed, or a greater part thereof, shall be. Such record is equivalent to actual delivery and continued possession of the property.

A MORTGAGE MUST BE IN WRITING when it is intended to convey the legal title.[z] It must be in one single deed which contains the whole contract. In the absence of a statute to the contrary it may be in two separate instruments —the one containing an absolute conveyance and the other a defeasance;[a] and generally whenever it is proved that a conveyance was made for the purposes of security, it will be treated as a mortgage, and all the incidents thereof attached thereto.[b] The defeasance must be of as high a nature as the conveyance to be defeated.[c] The rule as to the admission

And it is hereby also declared and agreed, by and between the said parties to these presents:

The word will includes codicils.

Wills are unwritten (or nuncupative) and written. The former are called nuncupative from nuncupare, to name, declare, or make a solemn declaration; because this class of wills were required to be made in solemn form before witnesses, and afterwards reduced to writing,[e] and by the appointment and naming of an executor.[f]

The practice of allowing the owner of property to direct its destination after his death is of very ancient date, coeval with civilization itself,[g] and with rare exceptions has existed always and everywhere.

BEQUEATHING is the giving of personal property, by will, to another.[h] The word may be construed "devise."[i] A gift, by will, of personal property, is called a "bequest."

BLINDNESS. See TESTATOR — CAPACITY, below.

CANCELLATION of a will, with an intention to revoke, is a revocation, and the destruction or obliteration need not be complete,[j] but must be by the testator or in his presence, and by his direction and consent.[k] It must be done with an intention to revoke; and evidence is admissible to show with what intention the act is done.[l]

CHARITIES are gifts to general public uses, which may be extended to the rich as well as the poor.[m] They embrace gifts to the poor of every class, including gifts to poor relations, where the intention is manifest;[n] for every description of college and school, and their instructors and pupils, where nothing contrary to the fundamental doctrine of Christianity is taught; to all institutions for the advancement of the Christian religion;[o] to all churches,[p] chapels, hospitals, orphan asylums,[q] dispensaries,[r] and the like;[s] to general public purposes,[t] as supplying water or light to towns, building roads and bridges, keeping them in repair, etc.,[u] and to other charitable purposes general in their character.[v]

A CODICIL is an addition to, or qualification of, a last will and testament.

All codicils are a part of the will, and are to be so construed.[w] A codicil duly executed, and attached or referring to a paper defectively executed as a will, has the effect to give operation to the whole as one instrument.[x] There may be numerous codicils to the same will; in such cases the later ones operate to revive and republish the earlier ones.[y] But in order to set up an informally executed paper by means of one subsequently executed in due form, referring to such informal paper, the reference must be such as clearly to identify the paper.[z]

It is not competent to provide by will for the disposition of property to such persons as shall be named in a subsequent codicil, not executed according to the prescribed formalities in regard to wills; since all papers of that character, in whatever form, if intended to operate only in the disposition of one's property after death, are of a testamentary character, and must be so treated.[a]

which, where the testator evinces a particular and a general intention, and the particular intention cannot take effect, the words shall be so construed as to give effect to the general intention.[b] The principle is applied to sustain wills in which perpetuities are created, so that, if it can possibly be done, the devise is not regarded as utterly void, but is expounded in such a manner as to carry the testator's intention into effect, as far as the law respecting perpetuities will allow. This is called a cy pres construction. Its rules are vague and depend chiefly upon judicial discretion applied to the particular case.[c] It is also applied to sustain devises and bequests for charity.

DESIGNATION is the expression used by the testator to denote a person or thing instead of the name itself; thus, a bequest of the farm which the testator bought of a person named, or of a picture which he owns, painted by a certain artist, would be a designation of the thing. So a legacy "to the eldest son" of A. would be a designation of the person.[d]

DEVISE is a gift of real property by a person's last will and testament.

A person to whom a devise is made is called the "devisee." A person to whom the residue of a testator's real estate is devised, after satisfying the debts and bequests and devises, is called the "residuary devisee." All persons having an existence, and even embryos, may be devisees, unless excepted by some positive law. But the devisee must be in existence, except in cases of devises to charitable uses.[e] In general, whosoever can acquire property by his labor and industry may receive a devise.[f] So, aliens, married women, minors, and persons of non-sane memory, may be devisees.[g]

A testator, being one who devises real estate, is called also a devisor. Any person who can sell an estate may, in general, devise it; and there are some disabilities to a sale which are not such to a devise.[h]

The term devise properly and technically applies only to real estate. The object of the devise must therefore be that kind of property.[i] But it is also sometimes improperly applied to a bequest or legacy.[j]

Devises are contingent or vested; that is, after the death of the testator. When the vesting of any estate in the devisee is made to depend upon some future event, it is contingent; if the event never occurs, or until the event does occur, no estate vests under the devise. But where the future event is referred to merely to determine the time at which the devisee shall come into the use of the estate, this does not hinder the vesting of the estate at the death of the testator.[k] The law favors the construction of the will that shall vest the estate;[l] but this construction must not be carried to such an extent as to defeat the manifest intent of the testator.[m] Where the estate is given absolutely, but only the time of the possession is deferred, the devisee or legatee acquires a transmissible interest, although he never arrive at the age to take possession.[n]

Where the devisee dies during the life of the testator, and the devise has lapsed, the estate so devised will go to the heirs, notwithstanding a residuary devise. But if the devise be void, as where the devisee is dead at the date of the will, or is made upon a condition precedent which never happens, the estate will go to the residuary devisee if the words are sufficiently comprehensive.[o]

EFFECTS denotes "property," and this in a more extensive sense than "goods."[p] In a will "effects" will carry the whole personal estate,[q] but not real estate unless the word "real" be added.[r] When preceded or followed in a will by words of narrower import, if the bequest is not residuary, it will be confined to species of property of the same kind with those previously described.[s]

FARM. In a will the word "farm" may pass a freehold, if it appears that such was the intention of the testator.[t]

GOODS. In wills "goods" is a most comprehensive and general term, and, if there is nothing to limit it, it will comprehend all the personal estate of the testator, as bonds, furniture, money, notes, stocks, etc., etc.;[u] but in general it will be limited to the context of the will.[v]

GOODS AND CHATTELS. In wills the term "goods and chattels," if unrestrained, will pass all personal property.[w]

HOUSEHOLD FURNITURE. By this expression, in wills, all personal chattels will pass that may contribute to the use or convenience of the household, or the ornament of the house: as, china, linen, pictures, and plate. But goods or plate in the hands of the testator in the way of his trade will not pass; nor will books nor wines.[x]

—— GOODS. This expression, in wills, will pass everything of a permanent nature (that is, articles of household which are not consumed in their enjoyment) that were used or purchased, or otherwise acquired by the testator, for his house; but not goods in the way of his trade. Plate will pass by this term, but not articles of consumption found in the house, as malt, hops, or victuals; nor guns or pistols, if used in hunting or sport, and not for defence of the house. A clock in the house, if not fixed to it, will pass.[y]

—— STUFF. These words are sometimes used in a will. Plate will pass under this term,[z] but not apparel, books, cattle, victuals, nor choses in action which do not fall within the natural meaning of the word, unless there be an intention manifest that they should pass.[a] Goods, as seven hundred beds in possession of testator for purposes of trade, do not pass under "household stuff."[b] In general, "household stuff" will pass all articles which may be used for the convenience of the house.[c]

IN TERRORUM. When a legacy is given to a person upon condition not to dispute the validity or the dispositions in wills and testaments, the conditions are not, in general, obligatory, but only in terrorum; that is, by way of terror, threat, or warning; if, therefore, there exists a reasonable or sufficient cause for litigation, the non-observance of the conditions will not be a forfeiture.[d] But when the acquiescence of the legatee appears to be a material ingredient in the gift, the bequest is only such while the legatee shall refrain from disturbing the will.[e]

INCEPTION. In the making of a will the writing is the inception.[f]

INTENTION. In last wills and testaments the intention of the testator governs unless the thing to be done is opposed to some inflexible rule of law.[g] This intention is to be gathered from the instrument, and from every part of it.[h]

INTESTATE. An intestate is one who, having lawful power to make a will, has made none, or has made one which is defective. In such case the deceased is said to die intestate, and his estate and effects descend to his heirs in the manner prescribed by law. See General Statutes. One who cannot lawfully make a last will and testament is called intestable. An infant, an insane person, or one civilly dead cannot make a will for want of capacity or understanding; and in the absence of a statute to the contrary a married woman cannot make a will without the concurrence of her husband, because she is under his authority.

ISSUE. Descendants, all persons who have descended from a common ancestor.[i] In a will the word "issue" may be held to have a more restricted meaning in order to carry out the testator's intention.[j]

LAST WILL is a disposition of real estate to take effect after death. It is strictly distinguishable from "testament," which is applied to personal estate;[k] but the words are generally used together, "last will and testament," in a will, whether real or personal estate is to be disposed of.

LEGACIES are gifts by last will. The term is more commonly applied to money or personal property, although sometimes used with reference to a charge upon real estate.[l] An absolute legacy is one without condition, to vest immediately.[m] An additional legacy is one given to a legatee to whom a legacy has already been given; it may be either by an increase in a codicil of a prior legacy given in the will, or to another legacy added to that already given by the will.[n] An alternative legacy gives two or more things without designating which. A conditional legacy is a bequest whose existence depends upon the happening or not of some uncertain event, by which it is to take place or be defeated.[o] A general legacy is one so given as not to amount to a bequest of a particular thing or money of the testator, distinguished from all others of the same kind.[p] An indefinite legacy is a bequest of things which are not enumerated or ascertained as to numbers or quantities; for instance, a bequest by a testator of all his goods, all his stocks in the funds.[q] A lapsed legacy is one which, in consequence of the death of the legatee before the testator, or before the period for vesting, has never vested; one which, on account of the death of the legatee before the period arrives for the payment of the legacy, lapses or deviates from the course prescribed by the testator and falls into residuum.[r] A distinction exists between a lapsed devise and a lapsed legacy: a legacy which lapses does not fall into the residue of the estate, unless so provided by the will, but descends to the heir-at-law; on the contrary personal property passes by the residuary clause where it is not otherwise disposed of.[s] A legacy for life is one in which the legatee is to enjoy and use the legacy during life. A pecuniary legacy is one of money; these are usually general legacies, but there may be a specific pecuniary legacy, as, of the money in a certain bag.[t] A residuary legacy is a bequest of all the testator's personal estate not otherwise effectually disposed of by his will.[u] A specific legacy is a bequest of a particular thing, or a bequest of a specified part of a testator's personal estate, distinguished from all others of the same kind.[v] A specific legacy may be of animals or inanimate things, provided they are specified and separated from all other things; a specific legacy may, therefore, be of money in a bag, or of money marked and so described, as, "I give two eagles to A. B. on which are engraved the initials of my name." A specific legacy may also be given out of a general fund.[w] If the specific article given be not found among the assets of the testator, the legatee loses his legacy; but, on the other hand, if there be a deficiency of assets, the specific legacy will not be liable to abate with the general legacies.[x]

Most persons are capable of becoming legatees, unless alien enemies, or prohibited by statute. Legacies to subscribing witnesses to a will are frequently declared void by statute.[y] Bequests to further or carry into effect any illegal purpose which the law regards as subversive to sound policy or good morals, would be held void, and the executor justified in not paying them.[z] But bequests to charitable uses are favored,[a] and decisions have been liberal in upholding bequests for the most diverse objects, and expressed in the most general terms.[b]

Abatement is a reduction of a legacy, general or specific, on account of the insufficiency of the estate of the testator to pay his debts and legacies. When the estate of a testator is insufficient to pay both debts and legacies, it is the rule that the general legacies must abate proportionately to an amount sufficient to pay the debts. If the general legacies are exhausted before the debts are paid, then the specific legacies abate, and proportionately.[c]

Ademption is the extinction or withholding of a legacy in consequence of some act of the testator, which, though not directly a revocation of the bequest, is considered in law as equivalent thereto, or indicative of an intention to revoke. Republication of a will may prevent the effect of what would otherwise cause an ademption.[d]

The question of ademption of a specific legacy depends entirely upon the intention of the testator, as inferred from his acts under the rules established in law. Where the relations of the parties are such that the legacy is, in law, considered as a portion, an advancement during the life of the testator will be presumed an ademption, at least to the extent of the amount advanced; but not where the advancement and portion are not of the same kind;[e] or where the advancement is contingent and the portion certain;[f] or where the advancement is expressed to be in lieu of, or compensation for, an interest;[g] or where the bequest is of uncertain amount;[h] or where the legacy is absolute, and the advancement for life merely;[i] or where the devise is of real estate.[j] But where the testator was not a parent of the legatee, nor standing in loco parentes, the legacy is not to be held a portion, and the rule as to ademption does not apply,[k] except where a bequest for a particular purpose, and money is advanced by the testator for the same purpose.[l]

The ademption of a specific legacy is effected by the extinction of the thing or fund without regard to the testator's intention;[m] but not where the extinction of the specific thing is by act of law, and a new thing takes its place;[n] or where a breach of trust has been committed, or any trick or device practised with a view to defeat the specific legacy;[o] or where the fund remains the same in substance, with some unimportant alterations;[p] or where the testator lends the fund on condition of its being replaced.[q]

Construction. 1. The technical import of words is not to prevail over the obvious intent of the testator.[r] 2. Where technical words are used by the testator, or words of art, they are to have their technical import, unless it is apparent that they were not intended to be used in that sense.[s] 3. The intent of the testator is to be determined from the whole will.[t] 4. Every word shall have effect if it can be done without defeating the general purpose of the will, which is to be carried into effect in every reasonable mode.[u] 5. Where a will of personalty is made abroad, the law of the testator's domicil (lex domicilii) must prevail, unless it appear that the testator had a different intent.[v] rent intention, but not against it.[x] Where there is no such internal evidence the following positions of law appear established: 1. If the same specific thing is bequeathed twice to the same legatee, in the same will, or in the will and again in the codicil, in that case he can claim the benefit of only one legacy.[y] 2. Where two legacies of a quantity of equal amount are bequeathed to the same legatee in one and the same instrument, there also the second bequest is considered a mere repetition, and he shall be entitled to one legacy only.[z] 3. Where two legacies of unequal amount of quantity are given to the same person in the same instrument, the one is not merged in the other, but the latter shall be regarded as cumulative, and the legatee entitled to both.[a] 4. Where two legacies are given to the same legatee by different instruments, in that case the latter shall be cumulative, whether its amount be equal[b] or unequal to the former.[c]

Debt—Release of by legacy. If one leave a legacy to his debtor, it is not to be regarded as a release of the debt, unless that appears to have been the intention of the testator.[d] Where one appoints his debtor his executor, it is at law regarded as a release of the debt;[e] but this is in general regulated by statute. But in equity it is considered that the executor is still liable for the amount of his own debt.[f] Where one appoints his creditor executor, and he has assets, it operates to discharge the debt, but not otherwise.[g]

—— Satisfaction of by legacy. In equity, if a legacy equal or exceed the debt, it is presumed to have been intended to go in satisfaction;[h] but if the legacy be less than the debt, it is deemed satisfaction for that amount.[i] Courts allow very slight circumstances to rebut this presumption of payment: as where the debt was not contracted until after the making of the will;[j] where the debt is unliquidated and the amount due not known;[k] where the debt was due upon a bill or note negotiable;[l] where the legacy is made payable after the debt falls due;[m] where the legacy appears from the will to have been given with a different intention;[n] where there is express direction in the will for the payment of all debts and legacies, or the legacy is expressed to be for some other reason.[o]

Legatee. One to whom a legacy is bequeathed. A residuary legatee is one to whom the residum of the estate is bequeathed or devised by will.[p]

—— Children. The description of children as legatees may have reference to the time of testator's death, or that of making the will; the former is the presumed intention, unless from the connection or circumstances the latter is the apparent intent, in which case it must prevail.[q] This term will include a child unborn;[r] but it will sometimes have a more restricted application, and thus be confined to children born before the death of the testator; it will make no difference whether the bequest be to children begotten or to be begotten, or which "may be born."[s] "Heirs" may be construed children,[t] and "children," when used to designate one's heirs, may include grandchildren;[u] but if the word "children" is used, and there are persons to answer it, then grandchildren cannot be comprehended under it.[v] The general rule is, that a devise to a man and his children, he having children living at the time when the will takes effect, creates a joint estate in the father and children; but if he has no children he takes an estate tail;[w] and a similar legacy of personal estate gives the father a life-estate if he have no children at the time the will takes effect;[x] but if there are children living they take jointly with the father.[y]

The term "children" will not include illegitimate children, if there are legitimate children to answer the term;[z] otherwise it may or may not, according to circumstances.[a]

—— Cousins. The term "cousins" will be restricted to its primary signification when it is before used in the same will in that sense.[b] Upon a bequest "to my cousin T. S.," if I have two cousins of that name,[c] evidence may be adduced to show which of the two was intended.[d]

—— Heirs. A legacy to one and his heirs, although generally conveying an absolute fee in real estate, and the entire property in personalty, may by the manner of its expression and connection be held to be a designation of such persons as are the legal heirs of the person named, and thus they take as purchasers by name.[e]

—— Interest in property bequeathed or devised. Property given specifically to one for life, and remainder over, must be enjoyed specifically during the life of the first donee, although that may exhaust it;[f] but where the bequest is not specific, as where personal property is limited to one for life, remainder over, it is presumed that the testator intended the same property to go over, and if any portion of it be perishable, as long annuities, it shall be sold and converted into personal property, for the benefit of all concerned.[f] In personal property there cannot be a remainder in the strict sense of the word, and therefore every future bequest of personal property, whether it be preceded or not by any particular bequest, or limited on a certain or uncertain event, is an executory bequest, and falls under the rules by which that mode of limitation is regulated.[g] An executory bequest cannot be prevented or destroyed by any alteration whatsoever in the estate out of which or after which it is limited:[h] and this privilege of executory bequests, which exempts them from being barred or destroyed, is the foundation of an invariable rule, that the event on which an interest of this sort is permitted to take effect is such as must happen within a life or lives in being, and twenty-one years and a fraction of another year, allowing the period of gestation afterwards.[i] Legacies may be made conditional; in such case the condition may be either precedent or subsequent; in the former case no interest vests in the legatee until the performance of the condition, and in the latter it is liable to be defeated by the failure or non-performance of the condition.[j]

No particular form of words is requisite to constitute one a residuary legatee. It must appear to be the intention of the testator that he shall take the residue of the estate, after payment of debts and meeting all the appointments of the will.[k] The assent of the executor to a specific legacy is requisite to vest the title in this legatee.[l] This will often be presumed where the legatee was in possession of the thing at the decease of the testator and the executor acquiesces in his right.[m]

—— Names. Mistakes in the name or description of legatees may be corrected whenever it can be clearly shown by the will itself what was intended.[n] The only instance in which parol evidence is admissible to show the intention of the testator as to a legatee imperfectly described is that of a strict equivocation; that is, where it appears from extraneous evidence that two or more persons answer the description in the will.[o] See COUSINS, above.

—— Nephews and nieces are terms which, in the description of a legatee, will receive their strict import, unless there is something in the will to indicate a contrary intention.[p]

—— Wife. A bequest to "my beloved wife," not mentioning her by name, applies exclusively to the wife at the date of the will, and is not to be extended to an after-taken wife.[q] One not lawfully married may, nevertheless, take a legacy by the name or description of the wife of the one to whom she is reputed to be married,[r] but not if the reputed relation is the motive for the bequest.[s]

Payment. A legacy given generally, if no time of payment be named, is due at the death of the testator, although not payable until the executor has time to settle the estate in due course of law.[t] Legacies are not by common law due until one year after the decease of the testator, in order to allow the executor time to dispose of the estate and pay debts; and sometimes, by special order of the probate court, this is extended, from time to time, according to circumstances.[u] Where legatees are under disabilities, as infancy or coverture, the executor cannot discharge himself by payment, except to some party having a legal right to receive the same on the part of the legatee, which in the case of an infant is the legally appointed guardian, and in the case of a married woman is her husband; but in the latter case the executor may decline to pay the legacy until the husband make a suitable provision out of it for his wife according to the order of the proper court.[v] The proper course in such case is for the executor to deposit the money on interest, subject to the order of the court.[w]

Translation is the bestowing of a legacy which has been given to one, on another; this is a species of ademption; but it differs from it in this, that there may be an ademption without a translation, but there can be no translation without an ademption.[x]

MIND AND MEMORY. See TESTATOR, below.

MOIETY is the half of anything: as if a testator bequeath one moiety of his estate to A., and the other to B., each shall take an equal part.[y]

MOVABLES. In a will "movables" is used in its largest sense, but will not pass a growing crop, nor building materials on the ground.[z]

MYSTIC TESTAMENT is a will under seal.[a] It is a form of making a will which consists principally in enclosing it in an envelope and sealing in the presence of witnesses.

NUNCUPATIVE. See introduction to this subject, above.

OLOGRAPH is a will that is entirely written, dated, and signed by the hand of the testator himself.[b]

PENCIL is any instrument made of black lead, red chalk, or other suitable substance, for writing. Any instrument for writing without ink. A will written with a pencil cannot on this account be annulled.[c]

PRECATORY WORDS. See WORDS, below.

PROBATE (or proof) of a will must always be made in the probate court, or the court having exclusive jurisdiction in all matters pertaining to the settlement of estates.[c] The probate of a will has no effect out of the jurisdiction of the court before which probate is made, either as to persons or property in a foreign jurisdiction.[d]

Any person interested in the will may compel probate of it by application to the probate court, who will summon the executor or party having the custody of it.[e] The judge of probate may cite the executor to prove the will at the instance of any one claiming an interest.[f] The attesting witnesses are indispensable, if the contestants so insist, as proof of the execution and authenticity of the will and the competency of the testator, when they can be had.[g] But if all or part of the subscribing witnesses are absent from the State, deceased, or disqualified, then their handwriting must be proved.[h] It will be presumed that the requisite formalities were complied with when the attestation is formal, unless the contrary appear.[i]

Wills over thirty years old, and appearing regular and perfect, and coming from proper custody, are said to prove themselves.[j] Wills lost, destroyed, or mislaid at the time of the testator's death may be admitted to probate upon proper proof of the loss and of the execution.[k]

RECOMMENDATORY WORDS. See WORDS, below.

REPUBLICATION is an act by a testator from which it can be concluded that he intended that an instrument which had been revoked by him should operate as his will; or it is the re-execution of a will by the testator with a view of giving it full force and effect. The republication is "express" where there has been an actual re-execution of it.[l] It is "implied" when, for example, the testator, by a codicil executed according to the statute of frauds, reciting that he had made his will, added, "I hereby ratify and confirm my said will, excepting in the alterations after mentioned;"[m] the will might be at a distance, or not in the power of the testator, and it may be thus republished.[n] The republication of a will has the effect: 1. To give it the full force of a will made at the time of the republication; if, for example, a testator by his will devise "all his lands in A," then revokes his will, and afterwards buys other lands in A, the republication made after the purchase will pass all the testator's lands in A.[o] 2. To set up a will which has been revoked.[p]

RESIDUE is that which remains of something after taking away a part of it; as, the residue of an estate, a part which has not been particularly devised by will. A will bequeathing the general residue of personal property passes to the residuary legatee everything not otherwise effectually disposed of; and it makes no difference whether a legacy falls into the estate either by lapse or as void at law, the next of kin is equally excluded.[q]

The residuary clause is that clause in a will by which the part of the property is disposed of which remains after satisfying previous bequests and devises.[r] The residuary estate is what remains of the testator's estate after deducting the debts and the bequests and devises. See DEVISEE and LEGATEE, above.

SINGULAR NUMBER. In law the singular number often includes the plural. A bequest to "my nearest relation," for example, will be considered as a bequest to all the relations in the same degree who are nearest to the testator.[s] A bequest made to "my heir" by a person who had three heirs, will be construed in the plural.[t]

TERROR. See IN TERRORUM, above.

TESTAMENT. A testament is a solemn, authentic instrument of writing, by which a person declares his will as to the disposal of his estate and effects after his death. A testament, to be valid, must be made when the testator is of sound mind; and it must be subscribed, witnessed, and published in such manner as the law prescribes.[u] Testaments are nuncupative or written. See the beginning of this article, and LAST WILL, above.

TESTATE is the having made a valid will. The condition of one who leaves a valid will at his death.

TESTATOR is a person who makes and leaves a testament or will at death. In general, all persons may be testators; but to this rule there are various exceptions: 1. Persons who are deprived of understanding cannot make wills; idiots, lunatics, and infants are among this class. 2. Persons who have understanding, but being under the power of others cannot freely exercise their will; and this the law presumes (in the absence of a statute to the contrary) to be the case with a married woman, and therefore she cannot make a will without the express consent of her husband to the particular will. When a woman makes a will under some general agreement on the part of her husband that she shall make a will, the instrument is not properly a will, but a writing in the nature of a will or testament. 3. Persons who are deprived of their free will cannot make a testament; as, a person in duress.[e]

Age. A testator must be of full age. See DEMENTIA SENILE, and law of various States, as given below.

Blindness is so far an incapacity that it requires express and satisfactory proof that the testator understood the contents of the will, in addition to what is required in other cases.[f]

Deaf and dumb persons will labor under a similar inconvenience, and especially in communicating with the witnesses, unless they have been educated so as to be able to write.[g] But the witnesses must be present with the testator, be within the possible cognizance of his remaining senses.[h]

Delirium from disease or stimulus, while the paroxysm continues to such an extent as to deprive a person of the right exercise of reason, is a sufficient impediment to the execution of a will.[i] But there is not the same presumption of the continuance of this species of mental perversion, whether it proceed from the intoxication of stimulus or the delirium of fever, as in ordinary insanity.[j]

Dementia senile. This is a defect of capacity frequently in question in courts of justice in testing the validity of wills. If the testator has sufficient memory remaining to be able to collect the elements of the transaction, viz.: the amount and kinds of property he had, and the number of his children, or other persons entitled to his bounty, and to hold them in mind sufficiently to form an understanding judgment in regard to them, he may execute a valid will.[k] Age itself is no sure test of incapacity.[l] But when one becomes a child again, he is subject to the same incapacities as in his first childhood.[m]

Idiots are wholly incapable of executing a will, whether the defect of understanding is congenital or accidental.

Lunatics are incapable of executing a last will and testament, except during such lucid interval as allows the exercise of memory and judgment. It must be an absolute, but not necessarily a perfect, restoration of reason and reflection, and not a mere temporary remission.[n]

Mind and memory. A testator must have a sound and disposing mind and memory. In other words he "ought to be capable of making his will with an understanding of the nature of the business in which he is engaged, a recollection of the property he means to dispose of, of the persons who are the object of his bounty, and the manner in which it is to be distributed between them."[o]

Monomania or partial insanity. This is a mental or moral perversion, or both, in regard to a particular subject or class of subjects, while in regard to others the person seems to have no such morbid affection.[p] It consists in the belief of facts in regard to the particular subject of the affection, which no sane person would or could believe.[q] When it appears that the will is the direct offspring of this morbid affection it should be held invalid, notwithstanding the general soundness of the testator.[r]

Persuasion. While the person is confined within those limits which leave the mind free, persuasion may be used to induce another to make his will, or even to make it in one's own favor. But if such persuasion should so far operate on the mind of the testator that he would be deprived of a perfectly free will, it would vitiate the instrument.[s]

THREATS. See IN TERRORUM, above.

TRANSLATION is the bestowing of a legacy which has been given to one, on another; it is a species of ademption, but it differs from it in this, that there may be an ademption without a translation, but there can be no translation without an ademption.[t] See ADEMPTION, above.

UNCERTAINTY. See CONTRACTS, CERTAINTY, ante.

UNINTELLIGIBLE. When a contract, a law, or a will is unintelligible, it has no force or effect whatever. See CONTRACTS, title CONSTRUCTION.

"WHEN," in wills, standing by itself, is a word of condition denoting the time at which the gift is to commence.[u] The context of a will may show that the word "when" is to be applied to the possession only, not to the vesting of a legacy; but to justify this construction there must be circumstances, or other expressions in the will showing such to have been the testator's intent.[v]

WORDS. It is a general rule that contracts and wills shall be construed as the parties understood them; every person, however, is presumed to understand the force of the words he uses, and therefore technical words must be taken according to their legal import even in wills, unless the testator manifests a clear intention to the contrary.[w]

Precatory words are expressions in a will praying or requesting that a thing shall be done. Although recommendatory words used by a testator, of themselves, seem to leave the devisee to act as he may deem proper, giving him a discretion, as, when a testator gives an estate to a devisee, and adds that he hopes, recommends, has confidence, wish, or desire that the devisee shall do certain things for the benefit of another person, yet courts have construed such precatory expressions as creating a trust.[x] But this construction will not prevail where either the objects to be benefited are imperfectly described, or the amount of property to which the trust should attach is not sufficiently defined.[y]

Mystic, Nuncupative, and Olographic Wills and Testaments.

Execution, form, requisites, etc. Donations inter vivos or mortis causa, cannot exceed two-thirds of the property of the disposer, if he leaves at his decease a legitimate child; one-half, if he leaves two children, and one-third, if he leaves three or a greater number. The name children included descendants of whatever degree they be, it being understood that they are only counted for the child they represent.[d]

Donations inter vivos or mortis causa cannot exceed two-thirds of the disposer's property, if the disposer, having no children, leaves a father, mother, or both.[e]

Any disposal of property, whether inter vivos or mortis causa, exceeding the quantum of which a person may legally dispose to the prejudice of the forced heirs, is not null, but only reducible to that quantum.[f]

In all dispositions inter vivos or mortis causa, impossible conditions, those which are contrary to the laws, or to morals, are considered not written. Substitutions and fidei commissa are and remain prohibited.

Every disposition by which the donee, the heir, or legatee is charged to preserve for, or to return a thing to a third person is null, even with regard to the donee, the instituted heir, or the legatee.

The disposition by which a third person is called to take the gift, the inheritance, or the legacy, in case the donee, the heir, or the legatee does not take it, shall not be considered a substitution, and shall be valid. The same shall be observed as to dispositions inter vivos and mortis causa, by which the usufruct is given to one, and the naked ownership to another.[g]

There are four different forms of wills:

1. Nuncupative (or open) by public act.
2. Nuncupative by private act.
3. Mystic (or sealed).
4. Olographic.

A nuncupative testament, under private signature, must be written by the testator himself, or by any other person from his dictation, or even by one of the witnesses, in presence of five witnesses residing in the place where the will is received, or of seven witnesses residing out of that place. Or it will suffice if, in the presence of the same number of witnesses, the testator presents the paper on which he has written his testament, or caused it to be written out of their presence, declaring to them that that paper contains his last will. In either case, the testament must be read by the testator to the witnesses, or by one of the witnesses to the rest, in the presence of the testator; it must be signed by the testator, if he knows how, or is able to sign, and by the witnesses, or at least two of them, in case the others know not how to sign, and those of the witnesses who know not how to sign must affix their mark.

In the country, it suffices for the validity of nuncupative testaments under private signature, if the testament be passed in the presence of three witnesses residing in the place where the testament is received, or of five witnesses residing out of that place, provided a greater number of witnesses cannot be had.[h]

A nuncupative testament by public act must be received by a notary public in the presence of three witnesses, residing in the place where the will is executed, or of five witnesses not residing in the place.

This testament must be dictated by the testator, and written by the notary as it is dictated.

It must then be read to the testator, in presence of the witnesses.

Express mention is made of the whole, observing that all these formalities must be fulfilled at one time, without interruption, and without turning aside to other acts.

This testament must be signed by the testator; if he declares that he knows not how, or is not able to sign, express mention of his declaration, as also of the cause that hinders him from signing, must be made in the act. This testament must be signed by the witnesses, or at least by one of them for all, if the others cannot write.[i]

A mystic, or secret testament, is made in the following manner: the testator must sign his dispositions, whether he has written them himself, or has caused them to be written by another person.

The paper containing these dispositions, or the paper serving as their envelope, must be closed and sealed.

The testator shall present it thus closed and sealed to the notary, and to seven witnesses, or he shall cause it to be closed and sealed in their presence. Then he shall declare to the notary, in the presence of the witnesses, that that paper contains his testament written by himself, or by another by his direction, and signed by him, the testator. The notary shall then draw up the act of superscription, which shall be written on that paper, or on the sheet that serves as its envelope, and that act shall be signed by the testator, and by the notary and the witnesses.

All that is above prescribed shall be done without interruption or turning aside to other acts; and in case the testator, by reason of any hindrance that has happened since the signing of the testament, cannot sign the act of superscription, mention shall be made of the declaration made by him thereof, without its being necessary, in that case, to increase the number of witnesses.

Those who know not how or are not able to write, and those who know not how or are not able to sign their names, cannot make dispositions in the form of the mystic will.

If any one of the witnesses to the act of superscription know not how to sign, express mention shall be made thereof.

In all cases the act must be signed by at least two witnesses.[j]

An olographic testament is that which is written by the testator himself. In order to be valid it must be entirely written, dated, and signed by the hand of the testator. It is subject to no other form, and may be made anywhere, even out of the State.

It suffices, for the validity of a testament, that it be valid under any one of the forms prescribed by law, however defective it may be in the form under which the testator may have intended to make it.

Testaments made in foreign countries, or the other States or Territories of the Union, shall take effect in this State if they be clothed with all the formalities prescribed for the validity of wills, in the place where they have been respectively made.[k] d-Civil Code, art. 1493. e-Id. art. 1494. f-Id. art. 1505. g-Id. arts. 1519–1522. h-Id. arts. 1581–1583. i-Id. arts. 1578–1580. j-Id. arts. 1584–1587. k-Id. arts. 1588–1596.

The form of foreign wills is regulated by law of domicil.

Testaments of persons employed in armies in the field, or in a military expedition, may be received by a commissioned officer, in presence of two witnesses. If the testator is sick or wounded they may be received by the physician or surgeon attending him, assisted by two witnesses. These testaments are subject to no other formalities than that of being reduced to writing, and being signed by the testator. if he can write, by the person receiving them, and by the witnesses. The testament made in this form shall be null in six months after the return of the testator to a place where he has an opportunity to employ the ordinary forms.

Testaments made during a voyage at sea may be received by the captain or master, in presence of three witnesses, taken by preference from among the passengers; in default of passengers, from among the crew. The testament made at sea can contain no disposition in favor of any person employed on board the vessel, unless they be relations of the testator. This testament is subject to the same formalities as the preceding one, and no others, and is not valid unless the testator dies at sea, or within three months after he has landed, in a place where he is able to make it in the ordinary forms.[l]

Heirs. Ascendants and descendants are called forced heirs, because they cannot be deprived of a certain portion of the estate of their ascendants or descendants. The portion of which they cannot thus be deprived is called their legitime, and that portion of his estate of which the testator may dispose is called the disposable portion.

Witnesses. The following persons are absolutely incapable of being witnesses to testaments:

1. Women of what age soever.
2. Males who have not attained the age of sixteen years complete.
3. Persons insane, deaf, dumb, or blind.
4. Persons whom the criminal laws declare incapable of exercising civil functions.
5. Persons who are constituted heirs or named legatees, under whatsoever title it may be. Mystic testaments are excepted from this provision.

I, A. B., of, etc., do make and publish this, my first as well as last will and testament:

I direct, that my body be decently interred in the burial ground of —— church, in ——, according to the rites and ceremonies of said church, and that my funeral be conducted in a manner corresponding with my estate and situation in life.

And, as to such worldly estate as it hath pleased God to intrust me with, I dispose of the same as follows:

First: I direct that all my debts and funeral expenses be paid as soon after my decease as possible, out of the first moneys that shall come into the hands of my executors, from any portion of my estate, real or personal.

Also: I direct that a fair valuation or appraisement be made, according to law, of all my estate, by three competent and impartial neighbors.

Also: I direct that all my stock in trade be sold at public vendue, or outcry, for good current money, but not upon credit; and that all the real estate of which I shall die seized, or possessed, shall be sold by my executors, for its reasonable value, for like current money, or on such credit, and the amount thereof be secured, in such a manner as is usual in like cases, to insure the full and punctual payment thereof: And to effect this, my intention, I do hereby vest in my executors full power and authority to dispose of my real estate, in fee simple, or for a term of years, or otherwise, in as full and large a manner, in every respect, as I could myself do, if living.

Also: I direct that the whole of my household furniture shall be and remain the absolute property of my beloved wife, if she shall be living at the time of my decease; but, if she shall not survive me, then that the same shall be given, absolutely, to my daughters then unmarried, as shall be living, share and share alike, and to be apportioned by three impartial neighbors, mutually chosen by my said daughters for that purpose.

Also: I do direct that the net proceeds of my personal estate, heretofore ordered by me to be disposed of, be divided equally as soon as it can be done, share and share alike, amongst my said wife and my several children who shall survive me; and that the proceeds of my real estate, if sold on credit, shall be divided in like manner, as soon as they shall come into the hands of my executors.

The heirs or representatives of any of my children, who shall have died between the time of my decease and the time of such division or distribution, to be entitled to such share or shares as their respective ancestors would have been entitled to receive if they were living.

And, the share of my real and personal estate, herein bequeathed to my wife, to be in lieu of her dower, at common law, if she shall so elect.

And, I do hereby appoint and nominate my esteemed neighbors, C. D. and E. F., executors of this, my last will and testament, reposing full confidence in their integrity to perform the trust thus committed to them.

I, A. B., of the county of ——, in the State of ——, farmer, being weak in body (or in perfect health of body, as the case may be), and of sound mind, memory, and understanding; but, considering the uncertainty of this transitory life, do make and publish this, my last will and testament, in manner and form following, to wit:

First: It is my will, and I do order, that all my just debts and funeral expenses be duly paid and satisfied, as soon as conveniently can be, after my decease.

Item: I give and bequeath unto my dear wife, W., one bed, one cow, etc., etc., together with such of my household furniture and kitchen utensils as she may choose to keep for her own use.

Item: I give and bequeath unto my said wife, the use and occupation of my plantation, etc., until my son, S., shall attain the age of twenty-one years (she maintaining and educating my minor children thereout), and from and after his arrival at such age, then I give and devise the said plantation, etc., unto my son, S., his heirs and assigns, forever; he or they paying thereout, unto my other children hereinafter named, the several sums of money to them respectively bequeathed; and also paying unto my said wife the sum of one hundred and fifty dollars (which sum I hereby bequeath to her) yearly, and every year, during her natural life, for her maintenance and support; all which legacies to my said wife I do hereby declare to be in lieu and stead of her dower, at common law. And, in case of the death of my said son, S., before his arrival to the age aforesaid, then I do order and direct that my executors, hereinafter named, or the survivor of them, shall, as soon as conveniently may be, after his decease, sell and dispose of my said plantation, etc., to such person or persons, and for such price or prices, as may be reasonably gotten for the same; and for that purpose I do hereby authorize and empower my said executors, or the survivor of them, to sign, seal, execute, and acknowledge all such deed or deeds of conveyance as may be requisite and necessary for the granting and assuring the same to the purchaser or purchasers thereof, in fee simple: And the moneys arising from such sale, to put and place out to interest, on good security, for the payment of the said annuity, hereby bequeathed to my said wife; the residue of the interest to be applied to the maintenance and education of such child, or children, as shall then be under age.

Item: I give and bequeath unto my son, O., the sum of one hundred dollars, to be paid to him six months after my decease.

Item: I give and bequeath unto my daughter, D., the sum of one hundred dollars, to be paid to her on her arrival at the age of twenty-one years, or the day of her marriage, whichever shall first happen.

And, as touching all the rest, residue, and remainder of my estate, real and personal, of what kind or nature whatsoever the same may be, in the county of —— aforesaid, or elsewhere, I give and devise the same unto my said wife, W., during her natural life, and from, and immediately after her decease, I give and devise the same unto my three children, S., O., and D., and to their heirs and assigns forever, to be equally divided among them.

And, lastly, I nominate, constitute, and appoint my said wife and my son S. to be the executors of this, my will, hereby revoking all other wills, legacies, and bequests by me heretofore made, and declaring this, and no other, to be my last will and testament.

In witness whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and seal, the —— day of ——, in the year ——.

Written Will—General Form.

Appointing Residuary Legatees, Executors—Disposing of Stock in Trade—Granting Annuities, Bequests, Devises—Power to Employ Attorneys, Prosecute Suits Abroad, etc., etc.

I, A. B., of ——, in the county of ——, esq., being in a very infirm state of health, and sensible of my liability to sudden death, at the same time being in my own apprehension of sound mind, do judge it best to make, and accordingly do hereby make this my last will and testament.

It is my will that all my just debts and the charges of my funeral be paid and discharged by my executors hereinafter named and appointed, out of my estate, as soon as conveniently may be after my decease, and I leave the charges of my funeral to the direction of my said executors.

I give, devise, and dispose of all my estate, real and personal (save what shall be necessary for the payment of my just debts and funeral charges), in the following manner:

I give to my daughter, D. R., and to her heirs and assigns, seven thousand five hundred dollars lawful money, which with what I heretofore advanced to and for her, viz., before her intermarriage with H. R., I judge to make at least ten thousand dollars. And I discharge her and the heirs of her late husband, L. H. R., and all concerned, and that may be concerned with and for her and them, of what I charged him with in my books.

I give to my daughter, D. U., and to her heirs and assigns, ten thousand dollars lawful money.

I give to my daughter, D. T., and to her heirs and assigns, ten thousand dollars lawful money, to be paid to her when she shall arrive at the age of twenty-one years, if she shall live so long; if otherwise, and she shall leave lawful issue, then I give the same sum to such issue, to be paid to such issue, in equal shares, when and as each of them shall arrive at twenty-one years of age, or at the time of his or her marriage, whichever shall first happen. And in the mean time, it is my will that the same sum be put and kept at interest for the benefit of the said D. T., and such issue, and I empower my executors, or whoever shall have the care of the same, ten thousand dollars, to apply as much of the interest and income of the same sum, as they shall judge best for and towards her and their support and education.

I give to my beloved wife, W. B., sixteen hundred and seventy-five dollars lawful money, also the value of five hundred dollars, like money, more, in such of my household goods as she shall choose; also the household goods and other things which belonged to her, and which she brought to me at our marriage, and all the personal estate since left to her by Madam M. M. by her will.

I also give to my said wife, W. B., and to her heirs, my negro boy, named Titus, as a servant for life, with the apparel he shall have at the time of my decease.

I also give to her my two-wheeled chaise, and what belongs to it of tackling, etc., and one of my carriage horses, namely, that which she shall choose of them.

I also give to my said wife, W. B., during her residence at ——, the right of sitting in my pew below, where she and my children usually sit, in the meeting-house in said, etc., wherein the Rev. Mr. P. R. usually officiates as pastor, and in such part of the same pew as she shall think proper, she paying one sixth part of the taxes which shall be charged or laid on and for said pew during the same time.

I also give and grant to my said wife, W. B., during her life, the annuity and sum yearly of eight hundred dollars lawful money, which, with what I have hereinbefore given to her, I mean to be, and that she accept the same in full of her right of dower in my estate, and I give to her as above, upon condition, that she, my said wife, shall give to my executors, when demanded, a release of all demands and claims of dower and otherwise, of and against my estate, save what I have herein given to her.

As my body servant, named B. S.,[a] has generally served me with great diligence and integrity I give to the same B. S. —— dollars lawful money, together with his apparel, agreeably to a writing I have heretofore executed for that purpose; and if hereafter he be unable to support himself, that he be supported by my sons, S. and O., in equal shares, and so by their respective heirs, and so as to free the town of —— from any charge for the support and maintenance of the said B. S.; and I charge what I hereby give to my sons, as well as themselves, with the performance hereof.

I give and grant to my honored mother, M. B., during her life, the annuity and sum yearly of five hundred dollars lawful money, on condition that it be received by her in discharge of my part of the yearly payment, to be made to her by myself and others, by force of the last will of my grandfather, Capt. G. R., deceased: yet I mean that this payment or annuity shall not be so made or understood, as to bar my said mother from her claim which she has and may have against others, by force of my said grandfather's will.

I give to Mr. M. F., on the day and at the time of my decease, —— dollars lawful money, provided and on condition he shall then be employed or engaged in my business in like manner as he now is. This gift I so make him in testimony of the great regard I have for him, and the sense I have of his great faithfulness in my service.

I give to the Rev. Mr. P. R. —— dollars lawful money.

And to the end that the payment of the annuities and yearly payments aforesaid, may be effectually secured, and the same duly paid, it is my will that —— thousand and —— hundred dollars lawful money of my personal estate shall not be received by or for my children, or any of them, until the said annuities and yearly payments be completed and cease to become due; but that the same sum of my personal estate shall, until the same annuities cease to become due as aforesaid, rest in the hands, and be under the management and improvement of my executors hereinafter named and appointed, to be placed and kept at interest on what they shall judge to be good security, and that such interest shall be applied and used as by this my will is directed. Except, and it is my will, that if there be any overplus arising from the interest of the said —— thousand and —— hundred dollars, in any year, after the several annuities, in this my will ordered, are fully paid for the same year, in such case, the same overplus, as it shall be received, as soon as conveniently may be done, shall be placed and kept at interest for the uses, ends, and purposes in this my will mentioned. But in case of the death of my executors before the said annuities, and each of them shall cease to become due, or their refusing or neglecting to take the care of the said —— thousand and —— hundred dollars and the income thereof, and the application and payment of the same, then it is my will that the said —— thousand and —— hundred dollars of my estate, and what may have arisen by the income thereof, if any be, shall be delivered over and put into the hands of any two gentlemen (not being children), the judge of the probate of wills for said county for the time being, shall judge fit to nominate and appoint as agents or trustees (which I empower and request him to do) to receive the same, to be by them managed, let, and placed at interest as aforesaid, for the purposes aforesaid, and the interest thereof annually by them applied in payment of the said annuities and agreeably to my other directions about the same. And in case the said judge shall refuse or neglect, in the opinion of my said wife, seasonably to nominate, appoint, and engage such agents or trustees, then it is my will, that the same —— thousand and —— hundred dollars, and the interest thereof unapplied, if any be, shall be delivered over and paid or put into the hands of any two gentlemen my said wife, W. B., shall please to nominate and appoint to receive the same, and these persons shall and may receive the same, in like manner, and for the uses, intents, and purposes aforesaid. But it is to be understood, that into whose hands soever the said —— thousand and —— hundred dollars and the interest thereof, shall be delivered as aforesaid, being nominated and appointed by the said judge of probate, or by my said wife, W. B., as aforesaid, the same shall be so received as that such receivers shall, at the time of the receipt of the same, make themselves accountable for the said —— thousand and —— hundred dollars and the interest thereof, according to the intent of this, my will, relative thereto, and that the gentlemen into whose hands the said —— dollars and any interest or income thereof shall be put and placed as aforesaid, shall, on receipt thereof, give bond to the said judge of probate to account for the same sum and the interest thereof, according to the tenor and intent of this, my will, and apply the interest thereof as hereinbefore directed.

[a] Where a testator in his will, directed his executor to support a person, it was held that such direction amounted to a legacy, and if the executor (or in case he refused the trust, the administrator cum testamento annexo), neglected it, an action would well lie, where there were sufficient assets. 4 Mass. R. 634.

And it is my will, that when the annuities aforesaid, and each of them, shall cease to become due, the said —— dollars, with the overplus interest thereof, if any there be, shall be divided to and among my children hereinafter named, to whom I give the same accordingly, as followeth, videlicit: To my daughter, D. R., and to her heirs, —— hundred and —— dollars thereof. To my daughter, D. T., and to her heirs, other —— hundred and —— dollars thereof. To my daughter, D. U., and to her heirs, other —— hundred and —— dollars thereof. And the residue and remainder thereof to my three sons, E., D., and O., in equal shares, and so to their respective heirs.

The residue and remainder of all my estate, both real and personal, not herein otherwise disposed of, I give and grant to my sons, E., D., and O., in equal shares and proportions, and so to their respective heirs forever. The share of my son, O., of the same residue and remainder of my estate, to be paid to him when he shall come to the age of twenty-one years, but until then the same share to remain and be in the hands of my said executors, the personal estate to be let and placed at interest, and the real estate improved or let to the best advantage, for the use of the said O., and so in like manner his share of all surplusage of interest and income, which I would have added to the capital stock, and let at interest for his benefit, saving, nevertheless, that the same interest and income may be used, paid, and applied, as I do by this will grant, allow, order, and provide.

If my estate at ——, or any part thereof, should at my decease remain by me unsold, and my executors shall think it best, that the same, or any part thereof, should be sold before my son, O, shall arrive at twenty-one years of age, in such case, I give and grant to my executors full power to grant and sell the share or part I give to the said O. therein, for such consideration as to my executors shall seem reasonable, and to make and duly execute any deed or instrument they shall judge proper for the purpose, and the money arising from the same sale to remain and be in the hands of the said executors during said O.'s minority, and by them be let at interest for the use of the said O. Provided, nevertheless, that my sons, E. and D., shall at the same time sell their respective shares in the same estate.

And it is my will that if my son, O., shall die before he shall arrive at the age of twenty-one years, then what shall remain of his share in the whole of my estate, according to this, my will, shall go, and I in this case give the same to his surviving brethren aforenamed, in equal shares, and so to their respective heirs. But if either of these brethren shall happen to die without legal issue living, and this while the said O. shall be living, then I, in the case aforesaid, give the same to the survivor of said brethren (namely, E. and D.), and the heirs of such survivor.

And in case my daughter, D. T., shall die before she shall arrive at the age of twenty-one years, leaving no lawful issue living, then what shall remain of the share of the said D. T. of my estate and the interest thereof, unapplied, shall go, and I give the same in such case as follows, viz.: one-half part thereof to my daughter, D. R., and to her heirs, and the other half part thereof to my daughter, D. U., and to her heirs. But if either the said D. R. or D. U. shall die without issue and before the said D. T. shall arrive at twenty-one years of age, and the said D. T. dying as aforesaid, then I give the whole of the same to the survivor of the said D. R. and D. U., and to the heirs of such survivor.

In case my executors shall judge it best not to sell my stock in trade, or any part thereof, immediately after my decease, but to continue the same, or any part thereof, in trade, for the benefit, but at the risk of such of my children as shall be concerned therein, then I empower my executors, for any term not exceeding twelve months next after my decease, to employ and improve my trading stock, or any part thereof, in the common course of trade as they shall think best for the benefit, and so at the risk of, those, to whom, according to this will, this part of my estate shall belong; yet I mean so to limit the time of such improvement, that if any of this interest shall be at sea at the expiration of said twelve months, a further reasonable time shall be allowed to complete the voyage and voyages, the same interest may then be abroad upon.

And it is my will, that my executors may pay the sums first mentioned to be given to my said daughters respectively, in good bonds, payable to me at the time of my death, or thereabout, accounting such bonds at the value of them on the day of my death. And I desire my executors, if need be, to lend their names in said capacity to my daughters respectively, when desired, for the recovery and receipts of what shall be due on such bonds, and give proper power therefor. But if my executors shall not think fit so to do, when requested, then my will is that my daughters be paid in money equivalent.

And as my executors must necessarily have much trouble, and employ a great deal of time in executing this, my will, I desire and empower them to employ Mr. A. A., or any other person they shall think fit, in assisting them in the settlement of my accounts and affairs, and in the improvement of my trading stock, and that they agree to give and pay to him and them such sums of money out of my estate therefor, as they, my said executors, shall judge reasonable.

Although it is my will, and I choose that the estates I have given to my son, O., and to my daughter, D. T., respectively, shall remain in the hands of my executors as aforesaid; yet, if my executors shall choose it, I consent that guardians be legally appointed for the said O. and D. T., respectively, and that their respective shares of my estate be paid to their respective guardians for the uses and intents in this, my will, limited, directed, and expressed.

And as it is my will, that so much of the income of what I have given to my daughter, D. T., as may be needful, may be applied for her support and education, so I will that the income of the estate I have given to my son, O., may be applied and expended for his support and education, until he shall arrive at twenty-one years of age, so far as shall be thought reasonable and best by such person or persons, as, during his minority, shall have the care of his share of my estate.

And it is my will, that my executors or either of them, join with Messrs. A. A. and A. Y. in prosecuting the cause now or late depending in England for the recovery of the schooner J. and cargo, and that he or they do everything which I might or could do for that end, so far as he or they shall think fit and judge best.

COPYRIGHT. See ASSIGNMENTS; CONTRACTS, ETC.

COPYRIGHT is the sole liberty of printing, reprinting, publishing, completing, copying, executing, finishing, and vending any original book, map, chart, dramatic or musical composition, engraving, cut, print, photograph or negative thereof, or of a painting, drawing, chromo, statue, statuary, and of models or designs intended to be perfected as works of the fine arts, upon complying with the provisions of the law of copyright; and in case of a dramatic composition of publicly performing or representing it, or causing it to be performed or represented by others. Also, the right to dramatize or translate one's own work.[a]

Copyright is not of a simple, but a complex nature, involving two conditions: one of publication, the other of exclusion.[b]

Statutes of copyright do not grant monopolies; they are only protective legislation against trespass on the rights of authors. Not that writers are a more important body than many others, but because it gives the State more trouble to keep thieves off their productions than of those of other skilled laborers, and also because it needs superior intelligence to see that ideas and woven words can be made property, and that they must be, or else their authors outlawed, degraded, and starved, and the community suffer in the end.[c]

In order to acquire a valid copyright in a work it is necessary that it should be original. If any part of the composition is copied or adopted by the writer from a prior existing work, of course the title fails with respect to this, as the writer cannot be the author of what he has adopted from another.[d] The law does not require that the subject of a book should be new, but that the method of treating should have some degree of originality. Copyright may exist in a novel arrangement, as well as in recent corrections and additions to an old work not the property of the compiler.[e]

The law rests upon no code of comparative criticism. It protects alike the humblest efforts at instruction or amusement, the dull productions of plodding mediocrity, and the most original and imposing displays of intellectual power.[f] It will secure to every person the property in every genuine product of their own mental labor, whether that product take the form of compilation, abridgment, new arrangement, or a wholly original work, if indeed there can be any such thing as a wholly original work.

The law will be liberally construed in favor of authors; and, leaving their comparative merits to be settled by critics at the tribunal of public opinion, it will protect and encourage their labors; the fruits of their literary toil are secured to them by the highest title, in order that they may keep open the springs of thought and feed the intellectual life of the nation.[g]

ABRIDGMENTS. Writers of abridgments have in general been favorably regarded by both the courts of law and equity.[h] "Abridgments may with great propriety be called a new book, because not only the paper and print, but the invention, learning, and judgment of the author is shown in them, and in many cases are extremely useful, though in some instances prejudicial, by mistaking and curtailing the sense of the author." A fair abridgment is always entitled to protection.[i] To constitute a true and proper abridgment of a work the whole must be preserved in its sense, and then the act of abridgment is an act of the understanding, employed in copying a large work into a smaller compass, and rendering it less expensive and more convenient, both to the time and use of the reader, which make an abridgment in the nature of a new and meritorious work. An abridgment, when the understanding is employed in retrenching unnecessary and uninteresting circumstances, which rather deaden the narration, is not an act of plagiarism upon the original work, nor against any property of the author in it, but an allowable and meritorious work.[j]

A mere selection or different arrangement of parts of the original work, so as to bring it into smaller compass, will not be held a bona fide abridgment. There must be a real, substantial condensation of the materials, and intellectual labor and judgment bestowed thereon, and not merely the facile use of the scissors, or extracts of the essential parts constituting the chief value of the original work.[k] The abridgment must not only contain the arrangement of the book abridged: the ideas must also be taken from its pages. It must be in good faith an abridgment, not a treatise interlarded with citations. To copy certain passages from a book, omitting others, is in no sense a just abridgment; the judgment is not exercised in condensing the views of the author not condensed.[l] Between a compilation and an abridgment there is a clear distinction: a compilation consists of selected extracts from different authors; an abridgment is a condensation of the views of the author. The former cannot be extended so as to convey the same knowledge as the original work; the latter contains an epitome of the work abridged, and consequently conveys substantially the same knowledge. The former cannot adopt the arrangement of the works cited; the latter must adopt the arrangement of the work abridged. The former infringes the copyright if the matter transcribed when published shall impair the value of the original work; a fair abridgment, though it may injure the original, is lawful.[m]

ACCESSIONS are those productions and compositions of a kind for which in the course of a literary production an author employs others to assist him. In such cases the product of their individual labor belongs to him who is the author and proprietor of the whole.[n] To constitute a bona fide accession an author must by his own intellectual labor, applied to the materials of his composition, produce an arrangement, combination, or performance new in himself.[o]

ACCOUNTS between authors and publishers.[p]

ACQUIESCENCE. Even where the statutory requisites to copyright have been duly observed, the conduct of the proprietor of a periodical may be of such a nature as to disentitle him to aid from a court of equity by means of interlocutory injunction; for example, if one lie idly by and knowingly allow another person to incur the expense of bringing out a work, which is an infringement of his strict legal right.[q]

ADDITIONS. See introduction to this subject, above.

ACTS OF CONGRESS. See ASSIGNMENT, CONSTRUCTION, INFRINGEMENTS, LIBRARIAN OF CONGRESS, REMEDIES, REQUISITES, etc., etc., below.

ADDITIONS. Copyright may exist in a novel arrangement as well as in recent corrections and additions to an old work not the property of the compiler.[r]

ALIENS. Citizens of the U. S., residents therein, and certain foreign authors, are entitled to copyright.

AMENDMENT. See NAME AND DATE, below.

ALTERATIONS, by a publisher who is proprietor of a work, made in a new edition under the author's name, so incorrect as to be injurious to the author's reputation, renders the publisher liable in an action for damages.[t] When, however, a portion of a work is written to be published under the name of another, the author would have no remedy in case of its alteration or variation.[u]

ASSIGNMENT OF COPYRIGHT.

Sec. 4955. Copyrights shall be assignable in law by any instrument of writing, and such assignment shall be recorded in the office of the librarian of Congress within sixty days after its execution; in default of which it shall be void as against any subsequent purchaser or mortgagee for a valuable consideration, without notice.[v]

—— FEES. "Sec. 4958. The Librarian of Congress shall receive from the persons to whom the services designated are rendered, the following fees:[w]

"1. For recording the title or description of any copyright book or other article, fifty cents.

"2. For every copy under seal of such record actually given to the person claiming the copyright, or his assigns, fifty cents.

"3. For recording and certifying any instrument of writing for the assignment of a copyright, one dollar.

"4. For every copy of an assignment, one dollar.

Foreigners and non-residents pay one dollar for recording title or description of articles.

Copyright is personal property, and may be assigned. It must, however, be in existence to be assigned at law.[x] An execution purchaser, however, does not acquire the rights of an assignee in the article sold on execution; and a seizure and sale on execution of plates for which the debtor has obtained a copyright does not transfer the copyright to the purchaser; the debtor is entitled, without reimbursing the purchaser for money paid on such sale, to an injunction to restrain the purchaser from striking off and selling copies therefrom.[y] The assignees under a commission in bankruptcy are not entitled to the manuscripts of an author, although the copyright of a book which has been printed and published will legally pass for the benefit of creditors,[z] and the price paid by the bookseller is as completely open to the diligence of creditors as the price of another commodity or merchandise. The reason assigned for this distinction is that the author's right of withholding the publication continues till the very moment his book is actually given out to the public; even the printer of the book would not be entitled to sell it for his payment, although there was not the smallest doubt that he has a complete lien over it till delivery, to prevent the author or his creditors from taking advantage of the publication till he shall have been paid.[a]

The assignment of a copyright in general terms will be referred to what was in existence at the date of the assignment, and not to any future contingency.[b] It should not by construction be extended beyond the first term, unless it seems to be actually meant by the author to be transferred forever, and including any future contingency.[c] Where, however, it is clear that the author intends to transfer all his interest in the copyright, as well as his right in the continuance or extension of the term, a court of equity will enforce a reformation of the contract so as to include all the assignees' interest.[d]

The assignment of an interest in a copyright must be in writing, though an agreement to assign may be by parol; and such assignment though unrecorded will be valid as between the parties, and as to all persons not claiming under the assignees.[d]

An assignment of the copyright of a work must have been in writing, and attested by two witnesses, in order to entitle the assignee to maintain an action for pirating it,[e] for the statute requires two witnesses to a consent to publication, and it is naturally inferred that an assignment which is of a higher nature than a mere consent must have at least the same solemnity.[f]

In the absence of a special contract, the assignor of a copyright is entitled after assignment to continue selling such stock of the work as remains on hand at the date of the assignment.[g]

An agreement to assign will be treated in equity as a valid assignment, upon the maxim that equity considers done that which ought to have been done.[h]

An assignment made by parol may be valid if registered in the office where the copyright was entered, and certainly so if afterwards acted upon by the parties.[i]

An author or proprietor may assign a distinct portion of his copyright.[j]

ARRANGEMENT. See introduction to this chapter, and ABRIDGMENTS, above.

ARTICLES. In order to give the proprietor of an encyclopædia, magazine, periodical, review, or serial, a copyright in articles composed for him by others, it is not necessary that there should be any express contract that he should have the property in the copyright: the fact of the author being paid by the proprietor for articles supplied expressly for the periodical raises the presumption that the copyright is intended to be the property of the proprietor; otherwise, the articles might be published by the writer simultaneously, or shortly afterwards, possibly to the detriment and injury of such proprietor. But any author may reserve to himself the right to publish any such composition in a separate form, and he will be entitled to the copyright therein when published separately, without prejudice to the right of the proprietor of the publication in which such article may have first appeared.

A person may be the proprietor of a copyright in the separate parts of a periodical, etc., simply by reason of his employment of the writers.[k] See AUTHOR, below.

AN AUTHOR is one who, by his own intellectual labor, applied to the materials of his composition, produces an arrangement or compilation new in itself.[l]

Authors may be considered as: 1. Originators; 2. Compilers; and 3. Translators.[m]

1. An originator has choice of his own thoughts and words, and his work is an entirely new and original one composed of such words and thoughts.

2. A compiler, abridger, arranger, or editor, is one who, by his own intellectual labor and judgment, arranges, composes, frames, or makes a composition of literary or scientific matter from various sources, and not originally produced by him.

3. A translator or interpreter is one who renders or interprets literary matter from one language to another, retaining the idea and the sense which are not his, and clothing them in words of his own selection. He is not a mere paraphraser, since a creditable paraphrase may be produced without the slightest familiarity with, knowledge of, or reference to the language of the original work, by a mere reference to a previous translation and a book of synonyms. The labor of a conscientious and faithful translator must be much more original and primary.

Where a person employs another to compile a book, and gives him some suggestions as to its character and form, and agrees to pay for such compilation, and thereupon the author conveys the copyright to the employer, such conveyance relates only to the original or first term of the copyright. The author has the sole interest in the additional term allowed to authors, and may renew the copyright and enjoy the benefit of such renewal.[n]

When, in the course of the composition or production of a literary or scientific work, an author employs another or others to assist him, the product of their individual labor will belong to him who is the author and proprietor of the whole.[o]

Where a person is employed, for a reward paid to him, to write a musical composition to be used as part of the representation of a dramatic piece, and as a mere accessory to such dramatic piece, the composer of the musical accessory has no copyright therein: the property in music so composed becomes vested in the employer, and he does not require the consent of the composer in order to represent it.[p]

Unknown author. Where an author is unknown, the copyright of a book belongs to its publisher.[q]

BANKRUPTCY. The assignees under a commission of bankruptcy are not entitled to the manuscripts of an author, although the copyright of a book which has been printed and published will legally pass for the benefit of the creditors.[r] And the price paid by the bookseller is as completely open to the diligence of creditors as the price of any other commodity or merchandise.[s]

BEQUEST. Copyright may be the subject of a bequest, and on the death of the person to whom it belongs, without any such bequest, will devolve on his personal representatives.[t]

BOOK. A "book" within the meaning of the act may consist of a single sheet, as the words of a song or the music accompanying it.[u] But a newspaper or price current is not a book within the meaning of the act.[v]

A label used in the sale of any article is not a book within the provisions of the copyright act.[w]

BUSTS. See SCULPTURE, MODELS, AND BUSTS, below.

BLASPHEMY AND PROFANITY are offences not only against morals and the public weal, but is in many States made a penal offence. They tend to undermine not only Christianity, which is a part of our law, but also disturb the peace and corrupt the morals of the community. If these offences in the shape of publications cannot be dealt with criminally, as in most cases they can, they are beyond the reach of any protection in law or equity; and while they are without relief from invasion by others, they will be restrained where any positive injury results from their publication.

CALENDARS, COURT GUIDES, DICTIONARIES, DIRECTORIES, AND WORKS OF THIS DESCRIPTION, ETC. The difficulty as to this class of cases is, that they do not only relate to a subject common to all mankind, but the mode of expression and language is necessarily so common that two persons must, to a very great extent, express themselves in identical terms in conveying the instruction or information to society which they intend.[x] In all cases where the sources from which materials for composition are to be derived are of a common or general nature, they are open to any one to gain a copyright in any arrangement of them which he chooses to make.[y] But although a person may thus acquire a copyright in his own arrangement of common materials, the materials themselves are equally open to every one else who chooses to have recourse to them, and different copyrights may be acquired in different arrangements of the same common materials. These arrangements must, however, be independent; a later arrangement must not be a servile imitation or reproduction of an earlier one; otherwise it subjects its author to the charge of piracy.[z]

Of the whole class of works embracing tables of figures, dictionaries, calendars, court guides, etc., etc., the only mode of arriving at the amount of labor bestowed is by the common test resorted to of discovering the copy of errors and misprints indicating a servile copying.[a]

A CHATTEL MORTGAGE on the copyright of a work is not a mortgage on the profits arising from a use of the copyright.[b]

COMMON MATERIALS, ETC. See CALENDARS, COURT GUIDES, ETC., ETC., above; DICTIONARIES, DIRECTORIES, ETC., below.

COMPILATION. "It is a great mistake to suppose because all the materials of a work, or some parts of its plan and arrangements and modes of illustration, may be found separately, or in a different form, or in a different arrangement in other distinct works, that, therefore, if the plan, or arrangement, or combination in another work is new, or for the first time made, the author, compiler, or framer of it is not entitled to a copyright. The reverse is the truth in law," etc.[c] No person has a right to borrow another's plan and arrangement and illustrations, and servilely copy them into any other work.[d]

The preparation and collection of notes from various sources is a work of no small labor and intellectual exertion: the plan, the arrangement, and the combination of these notes belong exclusively to the person collecting and arranging them. He is justly deemed the author of them in their actual form and combination, and is entitled to a copyright accordingly. If no work could be considered by our law as entitled to the privilege of a copyright, which is composed of materials drawn from many different sources, and for the first time brought together in the same plan and arrangement, and combination, simply because those materials might be found scattered up and down in a great variety of volumes, perhaps in hundreds, and even thousands of volumes, and might have been brought together in the same way and by the same researches of another mind equally skilful and diligent, then what would become of the elaborate commentaries of modern scholars upon the classics, etc., treatises upon astronomy, mathematics, natural philosophy and chemistry, legal treatises, digests and text books, the materials of which must essentially depend upon faithful abstracts, formulæ, and illustrations?[e]

CONSTRUCTION OF COPYRIGHT—IMPORTATION, PRINTING, AND PUBLISHING OF FOREIGN WORKS, ETC., ETC.

Sec. 4971 of the U. S. Revised Statutes, which gave to citizens and residents the right to print, publish, import or sell books, maps, charts, musical or dramatic compositions, prints, cuts, engravings, or photographs, written, composed or made by persons not citizens nor residents, was repealed March 3, 1891.

See REQUISITES OF A VALID COPYRIGHT, below.

CONTRACTS BETWEEN AUTHORS AND PUBLISHERS, ETC.

In all agreements between authors and publishers the terms should be distinctly stated, and the respective rights of the parties clearly defined. The number of copies of which the edition is to consist should be declared; otherwise the publisher might, if so disposed, print 20,000 as one edition.[g]

Agreements between authors and publishers should express beyond a doubt whether they are to operate as assignments of the copyright in the work, or merely as licenses to publish.[h] If the author sell and dispose of his manuscript in specie to a publisher, with the express understanding that the latter is to publish it, he cannot afterwards copyright in his own name: the copyright belongs to the publisher.[i]

Where an agreement between author and publisher is that the publisher shall take the whole charge, risk, and duty of bringing out the work (as he thinks best for the interest of both parties), such publisher has the right of fixing the price of such work when brought out.[j]

When an agreement between author and publisher states that after payment of the expenses of publication, etc., "the profits remaining in every edition that should be printed of the work are to be divided into two equal parts, one moiety to go to the author, and the other to the publisher," this points out certain definite times for the adjustment of the accounts, and at which the author becomes entitled to terminate his agreement with the publisher. Nor can the publisher by stereotyping the work deprive the author of this right.[k]

Under a contract between author and publisher, where the publisher agrees to publish the work and pay the author for copyright seven and a half cents for every copy of the book published, the publisher does not obtain the exclusive right to publish the work.[l]

If an author agree in writing to supply a bookseller or publisher with a manuscript of a work to be printed by the latter, an action for damages can be maintained for refusing to furnish the same,[m] provided the work be one which, if published, would not subject the author to punishment.[n]

Where, however, the author is engaged for a certain sum to write an article to appear, among others, in a work which is discontinued before any of it had been published, the pub-

COPY—DEFINITION OF, ETC. A copy (of an engraving, cut, print, photograph, painting, drawing, chromo, etc., etc.) is that which comes so near to the original as to give every person seeing it the idea created by the original.[q] Trifling variations are not material,[r] whether reduced to the size of an engraving, or still more diminished in a photograph,[s] or enlarged to a painted dioramic copy.[t] It is for the jury to consider whether the main design of the plaintiff's engraving had been copied, and whether the defendant's engraving was substantially a copy of the plaintiff's.

COPYISTS. The mere copyist, or the slavish imitator, who produces old materials substantially in their own forms, without new combination, is entitled to no protection under the statute.[u]

CRIMINAL PUBLICATIONS. "No author or printer who fairly and conscientiously promulgates opinions, with whose truth he is impressed, for the benefit of others, is answerable as a criminal. A malicious and mischievous intention is, in such a case, the broad boundary between right and wrong: it is to be collected from the offensive levity, scurrilous and opprobrious language, and other circumstances, whether the act of the party was malicious."[v]

DELAY. If any delay occurs in the assertion of the title to copyright infringed, the delay must be accounted for to the satisfaction of the court; otherwise, no assistance will be given.[w]

DICTIONARIES. In dictionaries there may be a certain degree of skill exhibited as to order and arrangement, or ingenuity exhibited in the selection of phrases and illustrations, which are the best exponents of the sense in which a word is to be used; there may also be great labor in the logical deduction and arrangement of the word in its different senses, when the sense of the word departed from its primary signification. On the other hand there is a large mass of words that admit of only one acceptation, and can be translated only one way, and the large mass of dictionaries are composed of words of that description; hence the new dictionary must, of necessity, contain much of the information and the results obtained from its predecessors.[x] Where words are of such a nature that the information contained in them must of necessity, if it be correct, be exactly the same in both, the test frequently applied by the courts to determine whether the second is a mere unlaborious production of the first, or has been compiled by original effort from common sources, is this:—to examine the inaccuracies which appear in both works, and see whether they are identical; if so, the inference of piracy is almost invariably drawn.[y]

See CALENDARS, COURT GUIDES, ETC., ETC. above; DIRECTORIES, below.

DIGESTS, ETC. The digest of a report usually included in and known as the head note is a species of property that will receive protection. The head note, or the side or marginal note of a report is a thing upon which much skill and exercise of thought is required: it may be considered in itself a species of brief and condensed report—an abstract of the decision conveying the principle upon which it is founded, and the pith and substance of the case.[z]

The right of selecting passages from books of reports (including entire judgments) in treatises upon particular subjects is not disputed. Had it been, the greater part of our law libraries would be much thinned, and we deprived of many valuable works, as a great portion consists of mere transcripts from books of reports.[a] See COMPILATION, ETC., above.

Digests of legal decisions are somewhat of the nature of abridgments. They give, under headings arranged alphabetically, a summary of the legal points decided in each case referred to, and if such arrangement and summary are the product of skill and mental labor on the part of the compiler, and the compiler is guilty of no infringement of the copyright in the published reports, he is entitled to a copyright; but if the compiler's labor is purely mechanical, and he only arranges in alphabetical order the marginal or head notes of cases contained in published reports, he is guilty of infringing the copyright in such reports.[b]

"A digest, undoubtedly, may be made from the published reports without necessarily subjecting the compiler to the charge of piracy; for instance, where the party applies the exertion and skill of his own brain in extracting the principal or the substance of the decisions before him, dressing it up in his own language, so as to produce an original work, not a mere stringing together of marginal or side notes which the labor and intelligence of the authors have fashioned ready to the compiler's hand."[c]

DIRECTORIES, GUIDE BOOKS, MAPS, ETC. In the case of a directory, dictionary, guide-book, map, or the like, where there are certain common objects of information, which must, if described correctly, be described in the same words, a subsequent compiler is bound to set about doing for himself that which the first compiler has done. The compiler may not cut out slips from the former work and go and see whether they are accurate, and if so, copy them verbatim into his own work, but he is quite justified in referring to the former book in order to guide himself to persons on whom it would be worth while to call.[d]

DIVISIBILITY, ETC., OF COPYRIGHT. Copyright is not divisible,[e] though the term[f] may be divided.[g]

ENGRAVINGS, ETC. Where the subject from which the engraving is taken is common and open to all, the first engraver of a print of it is not entitled to restrain any one else from making an engraving of the same subject, provided it be made from the original subject and is not a copy of the first engraving; but he can prevent another from copying his own engraving.[h]

EXECUTION. Copyright in a published print is not the subject of seizure or sale by execution, although it may be reached by creditors' bill, and applied to the payment of the debts of the author.[i] But in case of such a remedy it would be necessary for the court to enforce a transfer to the purchaser in conformity with the requirements of the copyright act in order to invest such purchaser with a complete title to the property.[j]

Whether this right extends to the publishing an unpublished work of an author, or otherwise making the same available, is very doubtful.[k]

A manuscript[l] in the author's hands, or a book half-printed, or in the process of publication,[m] cannot be taken in assignment or execution.

See ASSIGNMENT, above.

GRATUITOUS DISTRIBUTION. A multiplication of copies for the purpose of gratuitous distribution is as much an infringement of the proprietor's copyright as if the multiplication had been made for the purpose of pecuniary profit.[n]

IGNORANCE. Copyright is like patent in this respect, that if it is infringed ignorance will not avail as a defence in the one case any more than in the other.[o]

IMMORAL OR LIBELLOUS WORKS. The law will not assist one in the recovery of remuneration for his labor on such works.[p]

IMPORTATION. Copyright may be infringed by the importation for sale or hire of copies printed abroad.

INFRINGEMENTS OF COPYRIGHT.

Copyright may be invaded:[q]

1. By reprinting the whole work verbatim.
2. By reprinting a part of a work verbatim.
3. By imitating the whole or a part, or by reproducing the whole or a part with colorable alterations.
4. By reproducing the whole or a part under an abridged form.
5. By reproducing the whole or a part under the form of a translation.

COPYING, ENGRAVING, ETCHING, IMPORTING, PRINTING, PUBLISHING, SELLING, VARYING, WORKING, ETC., OF COPYRIGHT MATTER, WITHOUT CONSENT OF PROPRIETOR IN WRITING SIGNED IN PRESENCE OF TWO OR MORE WITNESSES.

Sec. 4965. If any person, after the recording of the title of any map, chart, musical composition, print, cut, engraving, photograph, or chromo, or of the description of any painting, drawing, statue, statuary, or model or design intended to be perfected and executed as a work of the fine arts, as provided by this act, shall, within the term limited, contrary to the provisions of this act, and without the consent of the proprietor of the copyright first obtained in writing, signed in presence of two or more witnesses, engrave, etch, work, copy, print, publish, dramatize, translate, or import, either in whole or in part, or by varying the main design with intent to evade the law, or, knowing the same to be so printed, published, dramatized, translated, or imported, shall sell or expose to sale any copy of such map or other article, as aforesaid, he shall forfeit to the proprietor all the plates upon which the same shall be copied, and every sheet thereof, either copied or printed, and shall further forfeit one dollar for every sheet of the same found in his possession, either printing, printed, copied, published, imported, or exposed for sale; and in case of a painting, statue, or statuary, he shall forfeit ten dollars for every copy of the same in his possession, or by him sold or exposed for sale.

IMPORTING, PRINTING, PUBLISHING, SELLING, ETC., OF COPYRIGHT MATTER, WITHOUT THE CONSENT OF PROPRIETOR, IN WRITING.

Sec. 4964. Every person who, after the recording of the title of any book, and the depositing of two copies of such book as provided by this act, shall, contrary to the provisions of this act, within the term limited, and without the consent of the proprietor of the copyright first obtained in writing, signed in presence of two or more witnesses, print, publish, dramatize, translate, or import, or, knowing the same to be so printed, published, dramatized, translated, or imported, shall sell or expose to sale any copy of such book, shall forfeit every copy thereof to such proprietor, and shall also forfeit and pay such damages as may be recovered in a civil action by such proprietor in any court of competent jurisdiction.[t]

"Any copy of such book" under this section may be understood to mean a transcript or copy of the entire book, and no less,[u] and courts will only adjudge such penalty for the copies found in the possession of the defendant.[v]

Where any wrong has been committed in respect to a literary work, and the complainant does not ask for an injunction to protect his common law rights, or the violation of his copyright, but only prays for an accounting, the redress must be sought at law for damages, and not in equity. The asking of an injunction is what constitutes the process equitable.[w]

PUBLICLY PERFORMING OR REPRESENTING DRAMATIC COMPOSITION, ETC., WITHOUT CONSENT OF PROPRIETOR.

Sec. 4966. Any person publicly performing or representing any dramatic composition for which a copyright has been obtained, without the consent of the proprietor thereof, or his heirs or assigns, shall be liable for damages therefor; such damages in all cases to be assessed at such sum, not less than one hundred dollars for the first, and fifty dollars for every subsequent performance, as to the court shall appear to be just.[x] Injunction provided by amendment, Jan. 6, 1897.

A previous acting or representing a play will not deprive the author of the right afterward to take out a copyright.[y]

An action may be maintained by the author, although he or his assignee has only filed his title-page, and has not published the work or play.[z]

An assignee of an exclusive right of performing a dramatic composition within certain limits may maintain an action for injunction to restrain its representation and performance within such limits,[a] if he has complied with all the acts required by law to secure a copyright.[b]

PRINTING OR PUBLISHING MANUSCRIPT WITHOUT AUTHOR'S OR PROPRIETOR'S CONSENT.

Sec. 4967. Every person who shall print or publish any manuscript whatever, without the consent of the author or proprietor first obtained, shall be liable to the author or proprietor for all damages occasioned by such injury.[c]

An author has a common law right in his manuscript until he relinquishes it by contract or some other equivocal act.[d] And a surreptitious publication of an important part of a manuscript is as much within the statute as if the manuscript were complete. Indeed the whole of a manuscript need not be printed.[e]

INTENTION TO PIRATE. The existence of an animus furandi (intention to steal) is deemed essential to piracy.[f] This animus furandi must not be understood to mean a deliberate design to steal the product of another's labor and surreptitiously appropriate it to one's own use and credit; the offence of piracy may be committed bona fide, with no dishonest intention, and without any idea on the part of him who commits it that he is infringing a copyright. "It is enough that the publication complained of is in substance a copy whereby the work vested in another is prejudiced.[g] In a book of avowed extracts from the poetical writings of others," if A. takes the property of B. the animus furandi is inferred from the act.[h]

The cases in which the animus furandi test properly applies is that difficult class relating to dictionaries, road books, and the like, where a certain amount of common material is used by different persons, and the matter at issue is "piracy or no piracy."[i]

INTESTACY. Where the owner of copyright in any published or unpublished production dies intestate, the copyright in such production devolves by operation of law upon his executor or administrator, who, as such, possesses all the rights that the original owner enjoyed.[j]

JOINT OWNERS OF A COPYRIGHT may make a contract between themselves as to the printing and publishing of a work, and neither will be permitted to set up against the other his original rights as a joint owner in violation of such contract.[z]

LEGAL FORMS. A person is entitled to copyright in practical forms and styles of writs and instruments introduced by acts of the general assembly or legislature, those acts giving only general descriptions of the forms to be used. "It is said that owing to the particular nature of the styles they cannot be the subject of copyright, because they are drawn up precisely after the form prescribed in the statute, and because any styles relating to the same subjects as those given by the complainer must, if the directions of the statutes and phraseology of conveyancers were used, be expressed in the same manner exactly as those proposed by the complainer. Now it may be quite true, that if the statute had supplied certain forms by which the operations intended to be thereby regulated were to be done, if the statute had contained, as statutes sometimes do, an appendix exhibiting certain schedules of forms which it was only necessary for any one to copy in order to avail himself of the provisions of the act, then I hold that the reprinting of such forms in a separate publication would not give him a copyright in those forms; but in the case here it is different, for the statute only gives very general directions and descriptions of the styles that are to be used. The schedules are very general in their terms, and it is no doubt of great practical importance to suit these general directions to each case falling under the statute as it may arise. The preparing and adjusting of such writings require much care and exertion of mind. As to invention, that is a different thing: it does not require the exercise of original or creative genius, but it requires industry and knowledge."[a]

LETTERS—PRIVATE. The copyright of private letters forming literary compositions is in the composer and not in the receiver, who has only a special property in them. "Possibly the property of the paper may belong to him, but this does not give a license to any person whatever to publish them to the world, for at most the receiver has but a joint property with the writer."[b]

Letters and communications sent expressly or impliedly for publication to editors or proprietors of legal publications become the property of such editor or proprietors, and cannot lawfully be published by any other person obtaining possession of them.[c]

LIBRARIAN OF CONGRESS.

Sec. 4948. All records and other things relating to copyrights and required by law to be preserved, shall be under the control of the librarian of Congress, and kept and preserved in the library of Congress.

An amendment, added Feb. 19, 1897, provides for the appointment of a Register of Copyright, who shall, under direction of the librarian, perform all the duties relating to copyright.

Sec. 4949. The seal provided for the office of the librarian of Congress shall be the seal thereof, and by it all records and papers issued from the office, and to be used in evidence, shall be authenticated.[d]

Sec. 4950. The librarian of Congress shall, on and after July 1, 1897, give a bond, payable to the United States, in the sum of twenty thousand dollars, with sureties approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, for the faithful discharge of his duties according to law.[e]

Sec. 4951. The librarian of Congress shall make an annual report to Congress of the number and description of copyright publications for which entries have been made during the year.[z]

Sec. 4956. No person shall be entitled to a copyright unless he shall, on or before the day of publication, in this or any foreign country, deliver at the office of librarian of Congress, or deposit in the mail within the United States, addressed to the librarian of Congress, at Washington, District of Columbia, a printed copy of the title of the book, map, chart, dramatic or musical composition, engraving, cut, print, photograph or chromo, or a description of the painting, drawing, statue, statuary, or a model or design, for a work of the fine arts, for which he desires a copyright; nor unless he shall also, not later than the day of publication thereof, in this or any foreign country, deliver at the office of the librarian of Congress, at Washington, District of Columbia, or deposit in the mail, within the United States, addressed to the librarian of Congress, at Washington, District of Columbia, two copies of such copyright book, map, chart, dramatic or musical composition, engraving, chromo, cut, print, or photograph, or in case of a painting, drawing, statue, statuary, model, or design for a work of fine arts, a photograph of the same: Provided, That in case of a book, photograph, chromo, or lithograph, the two copies of the same required to be delivered or deposited as above shall be printed from type set within the limits of the United States, or from plates made therefrom, or from negatives, or drawings on stone, made within the limits of the United States, or from transfers made therefrom. During the existence of such copyright the importation into the United States of any book, chromo, lithograph, or photograph, so copyrighted, or any edition or editions thereof, or any plates of the same not made from type set, negatives, or drawings on stone made within the limits of the United States, shall be and is hereby prohibited, except in the

Sec. 4959 provides that the proprietor of every copyright book or other article shall deposit with the librarian of Congress a copy of every subsequent edition wherein any substantial changes shall be made. See p. 415.

Sec. 4960 imposes a penalty of $25 on the proprietor of any copyright who fails to deliver, or deposit in the mail, either of the two copies or descriptions, or photograph, required by Sections 4956 and 4959. See full text, p. 415.

DIRECTIONS FOR REGISTERING COPYRIGHT,

Issued by Librarian of Congress.

Address.

"The Librarian of Congress, Library of Congress, Copyright Office, Washington, D. C."

Postage.

Send no stamps for return postage. The Copyright Office uses the Government frank.

Money Remittance.

Send no money for blanks; they are furnished without charge upon request.

Form of Application.

The Copyright Office will furnish, upon request, a legal form of application for copyright, with directions for filling it up.

First Step.

A first step to secure copyright is to send to Copyright Office a printed copy of the title of the book or other article. The recording of this is the record of claim of copyright. Written titles are not accepted, but will be if typewritten.

Formal Application.

Made by filling out the legal blank according to directions and properly addressing it. Accompany it with the title-page, preferably a printed title of the book or other article, or in lieu thereof a third copy. Sending two copies of a book or other article is not a compliance with the law that a title and two copies are to be sent, but three copies will serve, if such copies bear the printed title. Photograph and description must accompany title of paintings, drawings, statuary, etc.

When Title Filed.

Title must be filed on or before the day of publication in this or any foreign country, by delivery at Copyright Office or deposit in mail within the United States.

Date of Registration.

Titles are recorded under date of their receipt at the Copyright Office.

More than One Volume.

Each part or volume of works published in parts or volumes should be recorded as an independent work. The title for each number of newspapers, magazines and periodicals, distinguished by volume, number and date, must be filed as if a distinct work. Title alone is not sufficient.

Who can Copyright.

1. Authors, citizens of the United States, or of any country to which international copyright privileges have been extended. 2. Proprietors, assignees of authors. 3. Translators, editors, compilers, dramatizers, abridgers, etc.

Deposit of Copies.

No person shall be entitled to copyright unless he shall also, not later than the day of publication, in this or any foreign country, deliver at the office of librarian of Congress or deposit in the mail within the United States, properly addressed, two copies of such copyright book or other article. These must be complete copies of the best edition, and, if books, the copies must be printed from type set in the United States. If a new edition, one copy only is required. Failure to make the above deposits incurs a penalty of $25. Manuscripts should not be sent.

Receipts.

The official catalogue of entries will be mailed as a receipt; a certified receipt will be mailed on payment of fifty cents and the proper revenue stamp (ten-cent). Special receipts will be sent on request of proper form.

Notice of Copyright.

No copyright can be protected unless the notice prescribed by law is printed on, or inserted in, every copy of the article produced.

Form of Notice.

Either of these forms will do—a. Entered according to Act of Congress in the year (insert date), by (insert name), in the Office of the Librarian of Congress at Washington. Or, b. Copyright (insert date), by (insert name). The date must agree with the date of entry, and appear, in books, on the title or next page; on other articles on some conspicuous portion.

Penalty for False Notice.

False notice of copyright incurs a penalty of $100.

Fees.

See Sec. 4958, p. 398.

Term of Copyright.

The term of copyright is twenty-eight years from the time of recording title in the Copyright Office.

Renewal.

Within six months before the expiration of the first term of copyright the author, if still living, or his widow or children, if he be dead, can renew the copyright for another term of fourteen years. To renew, title must be filed a second time, and two copies sent. Fee for a certificate must be sent, and notice must be printed for four weeks in one or more newspapers of the United States.

Assignment.

See p. 398.

Publication.

Time of publication is not limited by statute, but it should take place within a reasonable time after recording the title.

Translations and Dramas.

These are copyrightable same as books. The forms and directions should be strictly followed.

Periodicals.

Each number of newspaper or periodical, distinguished by a statement of the volume, number and date, can be copyrighted. This can be done in advance, by entering the title volume, number and date of prospective issues, paying separate fees, and guaranteeing to send two copies to Copyright Office as soon as printed. Postmaster's receipt, as evidence of mailing, should be procured.

International Copyright.

The International Copyright Act of March 3, 1891, giving foreign authors the right to obtain copyright in the United States, limits the privilege to such countries as extend the same privilege to citizens of the United States. Up to the end of the nineteenth century such countries were: Belgium, Chili, Costa Rica, Denmark, France, Germany, Great Britain and colonies, Italy, Mexico, Netherlands and possessions, Portugal, Spain and Switzerland.

LIEN. Electro or stereotype printers have not a general lien on plates not manufactured by themselves, but only put into their hands for the purpose of printing from them.[m] To establish a general lien such printer must show such a custom of trade that the other party to the transaction contracted with reference to such custom; "nothing short of this will dispense with an express contract," etc.[n]

A printer who is employed to print certain numbers, but not all consecutive numbers, of an entire work, has a general lien upon the copies not delivered for his balance due for printing the whole of those numbers.[o]

A printer of a book in process of publication is not entitled to sell it for his payment,[p] although he has a lien upon it against the author or his creditors until delivery.

See title BAILMENTS, ante.

LOCAL OR STATE COPYRIGHT. Although a particular State cannot take away from an individual the property given him by act of Congress, and though the laws of such State are imperative as against the laws of the United States with which they may come in collision,[q] yet if an author or inventor instead of resorting to the act of Congress should apply to the general assembly or legislature of a particular State for an exclusive right to his production, there is nothing to hinder that State granting it, though the operation of such grant would be confined to the limits of the State,[r] and the use of the property is of exclusively local character; like all other property it must be used and enjoyed within each State according to the laws of such State.[s]

MUSICAL COMPOSITIONS. Although the score of an opera or piece of concerted music is so far an independent work as to be copyrighted in the name of the compiler, it seems that one may not compile such score without the consent of the composer of the opera or piece.[t]

Piracy may be of part of an air as well as of the whole.[u] To publish in the form of quadrilles and waltzes the airs of an opera, of which there exists an exclusive copyright is an instance of piracy.[v]

The addition of words, prelude, and accompaniment to an old air gave the adapter a copyright in the whole composition,[w] and where a person adapted words to an old air and procured a friend to compose an accompaniment, his assignee was entitled to describe himself in an action for piracy as proprietor of the copyright in the entire composition.[x] As to how far an arrangement for the pianoforte of the score of an opera is an original work.[y]

NAME AND DATE, ETC. Errors in the name of a person copyrighting, or of the date of copyright, prevent the author or proprietor from proceeding by action, suit, or otherwise, until such errors have been amended; or invalidate a subsequent assignment under the act.[z] The name of a firm will be sufficient without the names of all its members.[a] A change in the style of printing an author's or publisher's name, or a change of publishers will not affect the copyrighted title of a book.

See RECORD, ETC., below.

NAME OR TITLE. The name or title of a work may be considered as a kind of a trademark which no other person than the proprietor of the work can use so as to damage him in his property in it.[b] Cases of this kind depend rather upon the question whether the defendant has a right to sell as his own that in which another has acquired a description of property than on the question of copyright.[c]

NOTES—BONA FIDE The work or part of the work of another may be made the foundation of bona fide notes and observations, and may be published with such notes or observations without infringing the copyright in the original work. "Any person may copy and publish the whole of a literary composition, provided he writes notes upon it so as to present it to the public connected with matter of his own.[d] If a man took "Paley's Philosophy and copied a whole essay, with observations and notes, or additions at the end of it, it would depend on the facts of whether the publication of that essay was to convey to the public the notes and observations fairly, or only to color the publication of the original essay and make that a pretext for pirating it; if the latter it could not be sustained.[d]

The quantity as well as the character of critical notes added to the work of another is an important element in determining the question of bona fide notes.[e]

NOTICE. Where the title-page of a book was deposited in 1846, and the notice of the entering inserted in the volume stated it to have been deposited in 1847, even though the error arose from a mistake, it was nevertheless held fatal to the copyright.[f]

OBSCENE, IMMORAL, OR LIBELLOUS WORKS. The author or publisher of a work of libellous or an immoral tendency can have no property in it. Such a work is not the subject of copyright. They are entitled to no protection whatever, and no action can be maintained for pirating them.[g]

OBSCENE, IMMORAL, AND INDECENT PUBLICATIONS, ETC. "Every person who, within the District of Columbia, or any of the territories of the United States, or other place within the exclusive jurisdiction of the United States, sells, or lends, or gives away, or in any manner exhibits, or offers to sell, or to lend, or to give away, or in any manner to exhibit, or otherwise publishes or offers to publish in any manner, or has in his possession for any such purpose, any obscene book, pamphlet, paper, writing, advertisement, circular, print, picture, drawing, or other representation, figure, or image, on or of paper or other material, or any cast, instrument, or other article of an immoral nature, or any drug or medicine, or any article whatever for the prevention of conception, or for causing unlawful abortion, or who advertises the same for sale, or writes or prints, or causes to be written or printed, any card, circular, book, pamphlet, advertisement or notice of any kind, stating when, where, how, or of whom, or by what means any of the articles in this section hereinbefore mentioned can be purchased or obtained, or manufactures, draws or prints, or in any wise makes any of such articles, shall be imprisoned at hard labor in the penitentiary for not less than six months, nor more than five years for each offence, or fined not less than one hundred dollars, nor more than two thousand dollars, with costs of court."[h]

"No obscene, lewd, or lascivious book, pamphlet, paper, picture, print, or other publication of an indecent character, or any article or thing designed or intended for the prevention of conception or procuring of abortion, nor any article or thing intended or adapted for any indecent or immoral use or nature, nor any written or printed card, circular, book, pamphlet, advertisement, or notice of any kind giving information, directly or indirectly, when or how, or of whom, or by what means, either of the things before mentioned may be obtained or made; nor any letter upon the envelope of which, or postal card upon which indecent or scurrilous epithets may be written or printed shall be carried in the mail; and any person who shall knowingly deposit, or cause to be deposited for mailing or delivery, any of the hereinbefore mentioned articles or things, or any notice or paper containing any advertisement relating to the aforesaid articles or things, and any person who, in pursuance of any plan or scheme for disposing of any of the hereinbefore mentioned articles or things, shall take or cause to be taken from the mail any such letter or package, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall, for every offence, be fined not less than one hundred dollars, nor more than five thousand dollars, or imprisoned at hard labor not less than one year, nor more than ten years, or both."[i]

"All persons are prohibited from importing into the United States from any foreign country any obscene book, pamphlet, paper, writing, advertisement, circular, print, picture, drawing, or other representation, figure, or image, on or of paper or other material, or any cast, instrument, or other article of an immoral nature, or any drug or medicine, or any article whatever for the prevention of conception, or for causing unlawful abortion," etc. (providing mode of proceedings against, for seizure, forfeiture, and destruction of same, etc.)[j]

"Whoever, being an officer, agent, or employé of the government of the United States shall knowingly aid or abet any person engaged in any violation of any of the provisions of law prohibiting importing, advertising, dealing in, exhibiting, or sending or receiving by mail, obscene or indecent publications or representations, or means for preventing conception or procuring abortion, or other articles of indecent or immoral use or tendency, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall, for every offence be punishable by a fine of not less than one hundred dollars, and not more than five thousand, or by imprisonment at hard labor for not less than one year, nor more than ten, or both."[k]

The test of obscenity is, "Whether the intention and tendency of the matter charged as obscenity is to deprave and corrupt those whose minds are open to such immoral influences, and into those whose hands a publication of the sort may fall.[l] This test unmodified would sweep away such works as Shakespeare, Jonson, Beaumont, Fletcher, Chaucer, Dryden,

Byron, De Foe, Smollett, Fielding, and others, in whose works such tares are accessories which form the great contrasts and effects intended by these writers, and which, separated by themselves, could not be tolerated.

ORIGINALITY. The law will secure to a man the property in every genuine product of his own mental labor, whether that product takes the form of a compilation, abridgment, new arrangement, or wholly original work—if indeed there can be any such thing as a wholly original work. "In truth, in literature, in science, and in art there are and can be few, if any, things which in an abstract sense are strictly new and original throughout. Every book in literature, science, and art borrows, and must necessarily borrow and use much which was well known and used before; no man creates a new language for himself, at least if he be a wise man, in writing a book; he contents himself with the use of language already known, and used and understood by others. The thoughts of every man are more or less a combination of what other men have thought and expressed, although they may be modified, excelled, or improved by his own genius or reflection. If no book could be the subject of copyright which was not new and original in the elements of which it is composed, there could be no ground for copyright in modern times; and we should be obliged to ascend very high even in antiquity to find a work entitled to such eminence."[m]

The test of originality is "whether the claimant's book contains any substantive product of his own labor."[n]

To constitute one an author he must, by his own intellectual labor, applied to the materials of his composition, produce an arrangement or compilation new in itself.[o] In the case of subjects open to all, the work of the author must not be copied, but recourse must be had to the original sources.[p] One who gets another, or others, to compile a work or engrave a print is not entitled to copyright.[q]

The utmost that the law can do is to require and insist that the secondary author shall have exercised original labor in devising the plan, selection, arrangement, and presentation of the materials which he has found in medio (common to all) and open to all. It will not be sufficient on the one hand that he has bestowed upon his work the manual labor of copying or clipping the material; nor will it be necessary on the other, that he has used such judgment in discovering the wants of the public, and such skill as to have produced a really valuable book; the product of actual mental labor, whether valuable or worthless, will be protected by law.[r]

A judicious, careful, and useful arrangement of old and well-known material may be produced by original labor, and, if so, will be entitled to protection.[s] But though any person may thus acquire a copyright in his own arrangement of common materials, the materials themselves remain, as always, open to the next comer who chooses to have recourse to them, and different copyrights may be acquired in different arrangements of the same common materials. These different arrangements must, however, be independent. A later arrangement must not be a servile imitation or reproduction of an earlier one.[t]

PARTS OF WORKS. Where the parts of a work can be separated, there may be a copyright in any distinct part of it.[u]

PARTS AND EXTRACTS OF A WORK. That part of the work of one author is found in another is not of itself piracy, or sufficient to support an action; but the extracts may be too many, or contain too large or important a portion of the work from which they are made; then they will amount to piracy, even though they were published in the form of quotations, and the source from which they were taken is expressly declared.[v]

See QUOTATIONS, below.

PERIODICALS. Copyright in periodical publications may be infringed in the same manner as in the case of other literary works; but this species of property may also be infringed in a manner peculiar to itself. Even when the copyright in contributions to encyclopædias, reviews, magazines, and other periodicals is vested in the proprietors of such encyclopædias, etc., the right of publishing his contribution in a separate form reverts to the author twenty-eight years from the first publication, and the proprietor cannot, during the term of his own copyright, publish it in a separate form without the previous consent of the author or his assigns.[w] A republication in supplemental numbers of a selection of various tales previously published in that periodical is an infringement.[x]

The author has a modified property in possession, and the sole property in reversion.

PHOTOGRAPHING. Making an unauthorized photograph of the engraving of a picture is a photographing or copying of the picture itself. If the design is copied, it is immaterial whether it is done directly from the original, or indirectly through the medium of a copy.[y] It would be otherwise if the owner had parted with the right to multiply engravings.[z]

PIANO SCORES of operas are independent musical compositions, specific, separate, and distinct from operas themselves. It requires time, reflection, skill, and mind, so to condense the opera score as to compose the pianoforte accompaniment.[a] Whether a piano-forte arrangement of the score of an opera, executed without the consent of the composer of the opera, would be an infringement of his copyright therein has not been expressly decided.[b]

PIRACY IN GENERAL. If so much is taken as to impair the value of the original work, or so that the labors of the original author are substantially appropriated, this will constitute a piracy.[c] But the question of piracy does not depend solely upon quantity.[d] Intention is not a necessary element in the offence of piracy. If a copyright has been invaded, whether the party knew the work was copyrighted or not, he is liable to the penalty for violation thereof.[e]

The inquiry in most cases is not whether the defendant has used thoughts, conception, information, and discoveries promulgated by the original, but whether his composition may be considered a new work, requiring invention, learning, and judgment, or only a mere transcript of the whole or parts of the original, with mere colorable variations.[f]

PLAN OR METHOD. There can be no copyright of a mere plan or method of a work, distinct from the work itself, any more than there can be copyright of an abstract idea.[g]

"QUOTATION is necessary for reviewing; the quotation for such a purpose is not to have the appellation of piracy affixed to it, but quotation may be carried to the extent of manifesting piratical intention."[h] "A reviewer may fairly cite largely from the original work, if his design be really and truly to use the passages for the purposes of fair and reasonable criticism. On the other hand, it is as clear that if he thus cites the most important parts of the work with a view not to criticise, but to supersede the use of the original work, and substitute the review for it, such a use will be deemed in law a piracy. A wide interval might, of course, exist between these two extremes, calling for great caution and involving great difficulty."[i]

See PARTS AND EXTRACTS, ETC., above.

RECEIPT BOOKS. The composing receipts, or arranging them in a book, will give a copyright to the compiler. But the mere collecting them and handing them over to the publisher will not. Nor will the mere copying that which is public property. But if there be some new arrangement or classification of the subject, or the copy be not identical, and not a mere colorable variation,[j] then a copyright may exist for it.[k]

RECORD. Care should be taken that the copyright record is accurate, for an error in it will be a fatal defect in the author or proprietor's copyright.

REMEDIES UNDER THE COPYRIGHT ACT.

Jurisdiction.

Sec. 4970. The circuit courts, and district courts having the jurisdiction of circuit courts, shall have power, upon bill in equity, filed by any party aggrieved, to grant injunctions to prevent the violation of any right secured by the laws respecting copyrights, according to the course and principles of courts of equity, on such terms as the court may deem reasonable.[l]

The jurisdiction given the federal court by the acts of Congress has not taken away or diminished the original jurisdiction which before such acts[m] the state courts exercised; except when the jurisdiction was made exclusive in express terms, or by the necessary construction of the constitution.[n]

Limitation.

Sec. 4968. No action shall be maintained in any case of forfeiture or penalty under the copyright laws, unless the same is commenced within two years after the cause of action has arisen.[o]

Pleading and Evidence.

Sec. 4969. In all actions arising under the laws respecting copyrights, the defendant may plead the general issue, and give the special matter in evidence[p]

A. B. } Plea.
vs. } General Issue.
C. D. }

Said C. D. (in person, or by A. Y., his attorney) says that he is not guilty.

Under the general issue the defendant may prove:

"That ——, and not the plaintiff, was author of said book."

"That the plaintiff was not the proprietor of the said copyright, as alleged."

"That said copyright was not a subsisting copyright, as alleged (at the time of the alleged grievances)."

"That the plaintiff did not give notice of his copyright in said book, by inserting in the several copies of every edition published the notice required by law."

"That said plaintiff did not give notice of his copyright in said map, etc., by inscribing upon some visible portion thereof, or of the substance on which the same was mounted, the notice required by law."

"That the plaintiff was not the proprietor of, nor had he the sole liberty of representing (and performing) or causing to be represented (and performed) the dramatic (or musical) composition, as alleged."

"That the alleged musical composition was part of a dramatic piece, to wit: ——, adapted to the stage by the defendant, with the aid of scenery, dresses, and alleged composition, and other music and accompaniments, the general design of which representation was formed by the defendant."

"That the defendant employed the plaintiff, for a reward, to compose said musical composition, as a part of the said representation and dramatic piece, and as a mere accessory to the same, on the terms: that in consideration of said reward, said musical composition should become part of said dramatic piece, as designed and adapted for representation by said defendant, and that said defendant should have the sole liberty of representing and performing, and causing and permitting to be represented and performed, the said musical composition with said dramatic piece, and as an accessory thereto, and a part thereof."

REQUISITES OF A VALID COPYRIGHT.

1. Parties Entitled to Copyright.

Sec. 4952. The author, inventor, designer or proprietor of any (1) book, (2) map, (3) chart, (4-5) dramatic or musical composition, (6) engraving, (7) cut, (8) print, (9–10) photograph or negative thereof, or of a (11) painting, (12) drawing, (13) chromo, (14) statue, (15) statuary, and of (16) models, or (17) designs intended to be perfected as works of the fine arts, and the executors, administrators, or assigns of any such person, shall, upon complying with the provisions of this chapter, have the sole liberty of printing, reprinting, publishing, completing, copying, executing, finishing, and vending the same; and, in the case of a dramatic composition, of publicly performing or representing it, or causing it to be performed or represented by others.[r]

And authors or their assigns have right to dramatize or translate their works, copyrighted under laws of the United States.

In the construction of this act, the words "ENGRAVING," "CUT," and "PRINT," shall be applied only to pictorial illustrations or works connected with the fine arts, and no prints or labels designed to be used for any other articles of manufacture shall be entered under the copyright law, but may be registered in the Patent Office. And the commissioner of patents is hereby charged with the supervision and control of the entry or registry of such prints or labels, in conformity with the regulations provided by law as to copyright of prints, except that there shall be paid for recording the title of any print or label, not a trade-mark, six dollars, which shall cover the expense of furnishing a copy of the record, under the seal of the commissioner of patents, to the party entering the same.[t]

Book. A "book," within the statute, need not be a volume made up of many sheets bound together. It may consist of a single sheet or page of character, as, for instance, the words of a song, or the music accompanying a song.[u]

"Book" is a general name given to every literary composition which is printed.

"Design," when used as a term of art, means the giving of a visible form to the conceptions of the mind, or, in other words, to the invention.[y]

"Inventor" is one who finds out something new. One who contrives, or discovers, or produces a thing which did not before exist.

"Map," "Chart." The words "Map" and "Chart" are to be understood as applying to a particular map or chart copyrighted, since the natural objects from which maps and charts are made are open to all.[z]

Proprietors are owners. Under derivation of title from non-resident authors, or the assignee of a work composed by a non-resident alien, they cannot obtain a copyright therefor.[a] But the above decision, rendered under the prohibition of law in existence before the passage of the International Copyright Act of March 3, 1891, is doubtless invalid under that act.[b]

Resident is one who has his residence in a place. Residence is personal presence in a fixed and permanent abode.[c] Residence differs from domicil, although it is a great matter of importance in determining the place of domicil.[d]

A person, to be entitled to copyrignt as a "resident" under the corresponding sections of previous copyright laws, and by inference under the present, must be a permanent resident of this country.[e] But this decision, rendered under former laws, is invalidated in part by the International Copyright law of March 3, 1891, extending copyright privileges to certain foreign countries.

See ASSIGNEES.

2. How to obtain copyrights.

Under the provisions of Sec. 4956 of the Revised Statutes (see p. 406), it will be observed that the old word "before" has been changed to "on or before," and that under the International Copyright feature the place of publication is "in this or any other country." Therefore, the title-page must be deposited on or before publication of the book, in order to entitle the copyright to protection,[f] and the record from the proper office, made in the prescribed form, is prima facie evidence of the deposit.[g] Or a description of the painting, drawing, chromo, statue, statuary, or model or design for a work of the fine arts. In case of a painting, statue, model, or design intended to be protected as a work of the fine arts, the description provided for in this section must be definite and complete, and the photograph must be at least as large as what is technically known as cabinet size,[h] for which he desires a copyright. (By taking this incipient step a right is acquired which chancery will protect until the other acts may be done.[i] And if the title-page has been duly entered, the author may maintain an action for infringement if the printed copies were never deposited, and even if the work was never published at all.[j]) Nor unless he shall also, not later than the day of the publication thereof, deliver at the office of the librarian of Congress, or deposit in the mail addressed to the librarian of Congress, at Washington, District of Columbia, two copies of such copyright book or other article, or, in case of a painting, drawing, statue, statuary, model, or design for a work of the fine arts, a photograph of the same.[k]

The process of copyrighting must be gone through with in the case of every volume of a work separately.[l]

Sec. 4962. No person shall maintain an action for the infringement of his copyright unless he shall give notice thereof by inserting in the several copies of every edition published on the title-page or the page immediately following, if it be a book; or if a map, chart, musical composition, print, cut, engraving, photograph, painting, drawing, chromo, statue, statuary, or model or design intended to be perfected and completed as a work of the fine arts, by inscribing upon some visible portion thereof, or of the substance on which the same shall be mounted, the following words, viz.: "Entered according to act of Congress, in the year ————, by A. B., in the office of the Librarian of Congress, at Washington;" or, at his option the word "Copyright," together with the year the copyright was entered, and the name of the party by whom it was taken out, thus: "Copyright, 18—, by A. B."[s]

Manufacturers of designs for molded decorative articles, titles, placques, articles of pottery and metal, subject to copyright, may put the copyright mark on the bottoms of such articles, or in such other place as has been usual.

The record or notice must be accurate in point of date, for an error in this would be a fatal defect in the author's or proprietor's copyright.[v]

Sec. 4963 imposes a penalty of one hundred dollars upon any one who inserts or impresses a false notice of copyright on any article, or who knowingly issues or sells fraudulently copyrighted articles: one-half of said sum to go to the person who sues, the other half to the United States. The importation of articles bearing copyright notices, when there is no existing copyright thereon in the United States, is prohibited; and the courts may enjoin their issue or sale.

SALE OF COPYRIGHT. Where an author sells the copyright of a work published under his own name, and covenants with the purchaser not to publish any other work to prejudice the sale of it, another publisher (who has no notice of this covenant) may be restrained from publishing a work subsequently purchased by him from the same author, and published under his name on the same subject, but under a different title, and though there be no piracy of the first book.[x]

Where no such covenant has been entered into, and the publisher has agreed with the author for an edition of history or the like, and the work is completed, a continuation of such work by the author, independently or with another publisher, is no violation of the previous contract.[y]

If an author sells his copyright in a work for a limited term, the publisher may, except in case of actual fraud, continue, after the expiration of the term, to sell copies of the work printed during its continuance.[z]

A contract for the sale of a copyright is enforceable in equity.[a]

See TRANSFER OF COPYRIGHT, below.

SALE OF EDITION, ETC. Where an author has sold an edition of a given number of copies to one publisher, he is not at liberty before they are sold to publish the same work himself or through another publisher in such a manner as to compete with the edition he has sold, but is bound to afford the publisher a full opportunity of realizing the benefit of his contract.[b]

THE STATUTE OF FRAUDS applies to contracts between authors and publishers in the preparation or publication of literary matter.[c]

TERM OF COPYRIGHT, 28 YEARS.

Sec. 4953. Copyrights shall be granted for the term of twenty-eight years from the time of recording the title thereof in the manner hereinafter directed.[d] —Continuance of 14 Years.

Sec. 4954. The author, inventor, or designer, if he be still living, or his widow or children if he be dead, shall have the same exclusive right continued (provided all legal forms are observed). for the further term of fourteen years, upon recording the title of the work or description of the article so secured a second time, and complying with all other regulations in regard to original copyrights, within six months before the expiration of the first term. And such persons shall, within two months from the date of said renewal, cause a copy of the record thereof to be published in one or more newspapers, printed in the United States, for the space of four weeks.[e]

The taking out of a second term of a copyright is not like the strengthening of a defective title, but rather like a new interest obtained after the general interest has expired.[f] The extension provided for applies exclusively to the author, his widow or children.[g]

An assignee alone cannot take out a second or extended term unless he has clearly and unequivocally contracted and paid for it, and is entitled to be protected in it in equity rather than according to any mere technical rule of law.[h]

TITLE. There cannot be what is termed copyright in a single word, although the word should be used as a fitting title for a book.[i] The copyright contemplated by the act must be, not in a single word, but in some words in the shape of a volume, or part of a volume which is communicated to the public, by which the public are benefited, and in return for which a certain protection is given to the author of the work. Nor will any amount of expenditure incurred upon a work not yet given to the world, or any outlay in advertisements of the title of the work, give a right to an injunction restraining another person from using the same title.[j] But though two periodicals or books may have a similar title, the form, title, and mode of publication of one cannot be imitated by another in such a manner as would necessarily mislead the public and induce them to purchase the latter work as continuing parts of the former one.[k]

——False and Pretentious Titles. Publications whose titles, advertisements, and pretensions are calculated to deceive the public are not entitled to any protection. By this is meant works which are subversive of good order, morality, or religion. Indeed, it would be unjust, where literary productions are entirely innocent, harmless, and permissible, to deprive the author of a nom-de-plume whereby to conceal his name, if he from modesty or for the success of his work desired to do so. In such a case there is no serious design to deceive the purchaser or prevent an interposition to suppress any evil tendency the work may effect.

TRANSFER OF COPYRIGHT.

Copyright may be transferred by writing or parol in the same manner as other personal property. In the latter case, in order to be binding in law, it must be recorded in the office from whence the copyright issues.[l]

TRANSLATIONS into English, German, or any other tongue, of works published in other languages, if original, are entitled to copyright. If a foreign work is not protected by international copyright it is open to any one to translate it, but a translation already existing is the product of the translator's mental labor, and his property in it must not be infringed. Independent recourse must be had by subsequent translators to the common original source. "A man has a right to a copyright in a translation upon which he has bestowed his time and labor. To be sure another man has an equal right to translate the original work, and to publish his translation, but then it must be his own translation, by his own skill and labor, and not the mere use and publication of the translation made by another."[m]

If a foreigner translates an English copyright work, and then a subject or resident retranslates that foreign work into English, this last would be an infringement of the original copyright, and it would be no defence that the retranslator was not aware that the work he translated was itself a translation from an English work.[n]

A translation is not a copy of a book within the meaning of the statute.[o] The words "copy of a book" mean a transcript or copy of the entire book.[p]

UNPUBLISHED WORKS. Every new and innocent product of mental labor which has been embodied in writing or some other material form becomes the exclusive property of its author. Whether the ideas thus published take the shape of written manuscripts of literary, dramatic, or musical composition, or designs for works of ornament or utility planned by the mind of the artist, they are equally inviolable while they remain unpublished, and the author possesses an absolute right to publish them or not as he thinks fit, and to hinder their publication, either in whole or in part, by any one else.[q] For this exclusive property in the unpublished products of his mental labors, the author is not indebted to the copyright laws; his right is independent of statute, and depends entirely on the common law right of property.

The sale by the author of several thousand copies of a musical composition in the manuscript did not defeat the author's right to a copyright.[r]

The mere parting with the possession of manuscript, or intrusting its possession to another person, or a permission to another to take and keep a copy of the manuscript, does not authorize its publication by that other person.[s]

An author's rights concerning unpublished manuscripts do not depend wholly upon the common law. They are the subject of statutory regulation.

See INFRINGEMENT, ETC.

WILL. The proprietor of a copyright may transfer it by last will and testament. In the absence of such will it passes in the same manner as other personal property.[t]

CORPORATIONS. See titles BAILMENTS; BONDS; NOTES AND BILLS.

A CORPORATION is a body consisting of one or more natural persons, established by law, usually for some specific purpose, and continued by a succession of members. It is this last characteristic of a corporation, prolonging its existence beyond the term of natural life, and thereby enabling a long continued effort and concentration of means to the end which it was designed to answer, that constitutes its principal utility. A corporation is modelled upon a state or nation, and to this day is called a body politic as well as corporate—thereby indicating its origin and derivation.

Aggregate corporations are those which are composed of two or more members at the same time. Sole corporations are those which by law consist of but one member at any one time. Civil corporations are those which are created to facilitate the transaction of business. Ecclesiastical corporations are those which are created to secure the public worship of God.[u] Eleemosynary corporations are those which are created for the purpose of charities; as schools, hospitals, for the relief of the impotent, sick, deaf and dumb, and the like.[v] Lay corporations are those which exist for secular purposes.[w]

Moneyed corporations are those having the power to make loans upon pledges or deposits, etc., insurance and the like.[d] Municipal corporations are public corporations created by government for political purposes, and having subordinate and local powers of legislation; for example: boroughs, cities, counties, districts, parishes, towns, townships, etc.[e] It is an incorporation of persons, inhabitants of a particular place, or connected with a particular district, enabling them to conduct its local civil government.[f] Private corporations are those which are created wholly, or in part, for purposes of private emolument.[g] Public corporations are those which are exclusively instruments of the public interest.[h]

By both civil and common law, the sovereign authority only can create a corporation; a corporation by prescription, or so old that the license or charter which created it is lost, being presumed, from the long-continued exercise of corporate powers, to have been entitled to their sovereign grant. Corporations are created by legislative enactment of a State, or the Congress of the United States.[i] All corporations, of whatever kind, are moulded and controlled, both as to what they may do and the manner in which they may do it; by their charters, or acts of incorporation, which to them are the laws of their being, which they can neither dispense with nor alter. Subject, however, to such limitations as these, or general statute or constitutional law, may impose, every corporation aggregate has, by virtue of incorporation and as incidental thereto:

1. The power of perpetual succession, including the admission, and, except in the case of mere stock corporations, the removal, for cause, of members.

2. The power to sue and be sued, to grant and receive grants, and to do all acts which it may do at all in its corporate name.

3. To purchase, receive, and hold lands and other property, and to transmit them in succession.

4. To have a common seal; to make, break, alter, and renew it at pleasure.

5. To make by-laws for its government, so that they may be consistent with its charter and the law. Indeed a corporation may, within the limits of its charter, or act of incorporation, express or implied, lawfully do all acts and enter into all contracts that a natural or individual person may do, or enter into, so that the same be appropriate as means to the end for which the corporation was created.

A corporation may be dissolved, if of limited duration, by the expiration of the term of its existence fixed by charter or general law; by the loss of all its members, or of an integral part of the corporation, by death or otherwise, if the charter or act of incorporation provide no mode by which such loss may be supplied; by the surrender of its corporate franchise to, and the acceptance of the surrender by the sovereign authority; and, lastly, by the forfeiture of its charter by the neglect of the duties imposed, or abuse of the privileges conferred by it; and forfeiture being enforced by proper legal process.

Although the charter of a public corporation may be altered or repealed at pleasure, the charter of a private corporation, whether granted by the king previous to the revolution, or by the legislature of any of the States since, is, unless in the latter case express power be for that purpose reserved, within the protection of that clause of the constitution of the United States which among other things forbids a State from passing any "law impairing the obligation of contracts."[j] A corporate franchise, however, as to build and maintain a toll bridge, may, by virtue of the power of eminent domain, be condemned by a State to public uses, upon just compensation, like any other private property.[k]

ADMISSION. In trading and joint stock corporations no vote of admission is requisite, for any person who owns stock therein, either by original subscription or by conveyance, is in general entitled to, and cannot be refused, the rights and privileges of a member.[l] All that can be required of the person demanding a transfer on the books is to prove to the corporation his right to the property.[m] In a mutual insurance company a person may become a member by insuring his property, paying the premium and deposit money, and rendering himself liable to be assessed according to the rules of the corporation.[n]

AMOTION (the removal of an official agent of a corporation before the expiration of the term for which he was appointed, from a station assigned to him[o]) may be exercised with or without an express reservation for just cause;[p] and in the case of mere ministerial officers appointed during the mere pleasure of those appointing them.[q] Mere acts which are a cause for amotion do not create a vacancy till the amotion takes place.[r] The causes for amotion may be: 1. Such as have no immediate relation to the office, but are in themselves of so infamous a nature as to render the offender unfit to execute any public franchise, but indictment and conviction must precede amotion for such causes. 2. Such as are only against his oath and the duty of his office as a corporator, and amount to breaches of the tacit condition annexed to his office. 3. Such

BODY CORPORATE OR POLITIC. These terms are undoubtedly correct though very early terms applied to corporations.[s]

BY-LAWS, ORDINANCES, OR RULES. The power to make by-laws is usually conferred by express terms of the charter creating the corporation; though, when not expressly granted, it is given by implication; it is incident to the very existence of a corporation. Where there is an express grant, limited to certain cases and for certain purposes, the corporate power of legislation is confined to the objects specified, all others being excluded by implication.[t] The power of making by-laws is to be exercised by those persons in whom it is vested by the charter; but if that instrument is silent, it resides in the members of the corporation at large.[u]

The Constitution of the United States and acts of Congress enacted in conformity thereto, the constitution of the State in which a corporation is located, and acts of the legislature enacted in conformity thereto, together with the common law as therein accepted, are of superior force to any by-law; and any by-law contrary to either of them is void, whether the charter authorizes the making of such by-law or not, for no legislature can grant power greater than they themselves possess.[v]

CAPITAL STOCK is not only the sum divided into shares and raised by mutual subscription of the members of a corporation, but also the sum upon which calls may be made upon the stockholders and dividends are to be paid.[w] It is the capital of the corporation. It is entered in the proper books in the name of the person owning it, and can only be transferred by such person or his attorney. Certificates are issued to the person to whom it is transferred; and when a new transfer is effected, such certificate surrendered and cancelled, a new one being issued to the transferree. Sometimes it is sold by delivering the certificate accompanied by a power of attorney to transfer it, but such a sale is merely an equitable assignment.[x] Bonds are transferable by delivery, and are payable to bearer. Stock held by individuals in corporation, whether States, municipal, or private, is personal property.[y]

Stock issued by an agent of a company transcending his authority, as in case of over issue, is not binding on a corporation or company.[z]

CHARTER. ALTERATION AND REPEAL. See INTRODUCTION, above.

COMMON SEAL. The ancient and technical rule of the common law that a corporation cannot manifest its intention by any personal act or oral discourse, and that it acts and speaks only by its common seal, is no longer law in the United States.[a]

COMPANY property is an association of a number of individuals for the purpose of carrying on some legitimate business. Company is not partnership, usage reserving the term to associations whose members are in greater number, with greater capital and greater enterprise. When such a company is authorized by the State or general government it becomes a corporation.

DIRECTORS are appointed or elected according to law to direct and manage the affairs of a corporation or company. Collectively they form a board of directors. To make a legal board of directors they must meet at a time when and a place where every other director has the opportunity of attending to consult and be consulted with; and there must be a sufficient number present to constitute a quorum.[b] The acts of such a board evidenced by a legal vote are as binding upon the corporation, and as complete authority to their agents, as the most solemn acts done under their corporate seal.[c]

Directors are generally invested with certain powers by the acts of the legislature to which they owe their existence. In corporations created by statutes it is generally contemplated by the charter that the business of the corporation shall be transacted exclusively by the directors.[d]

Directors of a corporation are trustees, and as such are required to use due diligence and attention to its concerns, and are bound to a faithful discharge of the duty which the situation imposes. They are liable to the stockholders whenever there has been gross negligence or fraud, but not for unintentional errors.[e]

See GENERAL STATUTES.

DISFRANCHISEMENT is the depriving a member of a corporation of his right as such, by expulsion.[f] It differs from amotion, which applies to the removal of an officer from office, leaving him his rights as a member.[g]

DISSOLUTION. See INTRODUCTION, above.

DIVIDEND is that part of the principal or profits divided among the members or stockholders of a corporation, or to its creditors upon bankruptcy, dissolution, or insolvency.

EXPULSION. Corporations have an inherent right of expulsion: 1. Where an offence has been committed which has no immediate relation to a member's corporate duty, but is of so infamous a nature as to render him unfit for the society of honest men, as perjury, forgery, and the like. But before an expulsion is made for a cause of this kind it is necessary that there should be a previous conviction by a jury, according to the law of the land. 2. When the offence is against his duty as a corporator, in which case he may be expelled, on trial and conviction before the corporation. 3. When the offence is both against the member's duty as a corporator and also indictable.[h]

Members of joint stock, incorporated companies, or of any corporation owning property, cannot, without express authority in the charter, be expelled, and thus deprived of their interest in the general fund.[i]

MANAGERS. See DIRECTORS, above.

NAME. Corporations must, in general, contract, sue and be sued, by their corporate names.[j] Yet a slight alteration in stating the name is unimportant, even if there be no possibility of mistaking the identity of the corporation suing.[k]

NUMBER. When a corporation is composed of an indefinite number of persons, any number of them consisting of a majority of those present may do any act, unless it be otherwise regulated by the charter or by-laws.

POWERS. See INTRODUCTION, above.

PREDECESSORS in a corporation stand in the same relation to the successor that the ancestor does to the heir.

PRESIDENT. The president of a corporation usually directs the mode in which business is to be transacted; from his decision there is an appeal to the body over which he presides.

QUASI CORPORATIONS are those bodies or municipal societies which, though not vested with the general powers of corporations, are yet recognized by statute or immemorial usage as persons or aggregate corporation with precise duties which may be enforced, and privileges which may be maintained in actions and suits at law. They possess limited powers coextensive with the duties imposed upon them by statute and usage, but are restrained from a general use of authority. Among quasi corporations may be ranked towns, townships, parishes, hundreds, and other political divisions of counties, which are established without an express charter of incorporation; also commissioners of a county, supervisors of highways, overseers of the poor, loan officers of the county, and the like, who are invested with corporate powers, sub modo, and for a few specified purposes only; but not such a body as the general assembly of the Presbyterian church, which has not the capacity to sue and be sued.[l]

QUORUM is the number required to transact business. There is a difference between an act done by a definite number of persons and one performed by an indefinite number. In the first case a majority is required to constitute a quorum, unless the law expressly directs that another number may make one. In the latter case any number who may be present may act, the majority of those present having, as in other cases, the right to act.[m] Sometimes the law requires a greater number than a bare majority to form a quorum. In such case no quorum is present until such a number convene.

SCRIP. The possession of scrip certificates is prima facie evidence of ownership of the shares therein designated.[n] Such certificates are not goods, wares or merchandise within the statute of frauds.[o]

SHARES. See CAPITAL STOCK, above.

STOCK. See CAPITAL STOCK, above.

ULTRA VIRES are those acts beyond the scope of the powers of a corporation as defined by the charter or acts of incorporation.

As a general rule, such acts are void, and impose no obligation upon the corporation, although they assume the form of contracts, inasmuch as all persons dealing with a corporation, especially where it is created by the laws of the State or country where it exists, of which every one is presumed to have notice and information. It is otherwise as to laws imposing restraints upon it not contained in its charter, where the contract is made or the transaction takes place without the limits of the State or county under whose laws the corporation exists.[p] If, however, a corporation receives money or other valuable consideration under such a transaction or contract, upon rescinding or repudiating the act or contract under which it was paid or delivered, it could be recovered back by action or suit for that purpose.[q] So, too, the corporation is liable to be proceeded against by quo warranto, for the usurpation of powers in its name by its officers and agents, and deprived of its charter as a penalty for such acts; the defence of a want of power to bind the corporation not being available in such cases, since it would lead to entire corporate irresponsibility.[r]

A court of equity, at the suit of the stockholders of the corporation, will restrain the commission of acts beyond the corporate power, by injunction operating upon the individual officers and directors, as well as the corporation.[s] But acquiescence for any considerable time in the exercise of excessive powers after they come to the knowledge of the stockholders, would be a decisive objection to such a remedy.[t]

DAMAGES. See titles AGENCY; BAILMENTS; BONDS, NOTES, AND BILLS; CONTRACTS, ETC., ETC.

DAMAGES is the indemnity recoverable by a person who has sustained an injury, either in his person, property, or relative rights, through the act or default of another. The sum claimed as such indemnity by a plaintiff in his complaint. The injury or loss for which compensation is sought.

Actual damages are those awarded for a loss or injury actually sustained; in contra-distinction from damages implied by law, and from those awarded by way of punishment. Compensatory damages are those allowed as a recompense for the injury actually received. Consequential damages are those which, though directly, are not immediately consequent upon the act or default complained of. Exemplary damages are damages allowed as a punishment for torts committed with fraud, actual malice, or deliberate violence, or oppression. General damages are those which necessarily, and by implication of law, result from the act or default complained of. Liquidated damages are damages whose amount has been determined by anticipatory agreement between the parties. Measure of damages is a rule or method by which the damage sustained is to be estimated or measured. Nominal damages are a trifling sum awarded where a breach of duty, or an infraction of the plaintiff's right is shown, but no serious loss is proved to have been sustained. Punitive damages are exemplary damages. Special damages are such as arise directly, but not necessarily, or by implication of law, from the act or default complained of. For further definition see subsequent sections of this subject. Unliquidated damages are damages whose amount has not been determined.

To constitute a right to recover damages, the party claiming damages must have sustained a loss; the party against whom they are claimed must be chargeable with a wrong; the loss must be the natural and proximate consequence of the wrong. There is no right to damages, properly so called, where there is no loss. Damages are based on the idea of a loss to be compensated, a damage to be made good.[a] This loss, however, need not always be distinct and definite, capable of exact description, or of measurements in dollars and cents. A sufficient loss to sustain an action may appear from the mere nature of the case itself.

The loss must be the natural and proximate consequence of the wrong.[b] Or, the "direct and necessary," or, "legal and natural" consequence. It must not be "remote" or "consequential." The loss must be the natural consequence. Every man is expected—and may justly be—to foresee the usual and natural consequences of his acts, and for these he may justly be held accountable; but not for consequences that could not have been foreseen.[c] It must also be the proximate consequence. Vague and indefinite results, remote and consequential, and, thus, uncertain, are not embraced in the compensation given by damages. It cannot be certainly known that they are attributable to the wrong, or whether they are not rather connected with other causes.[d]

In an action for damages for an injury caused by negligence, the plaintiff must himself appear to have been free from fault; for, if his own negligence in any way contributed directly to produce the injury, he can recover nothing. The law will not attempt to apportion the loss according to the different degrees of negligence of the two parties.[e] Judicial officers are not liable in damages for erroneous decisions.

When a servant is injured through the negligence of a fellow-servant employed in the same enterprise or avocation, the common employer is not liable for damages. The servant in engaging, takes the risk of injury from the negligence of his fellow-servants.[f] But this rule does not exonerate the master from liability of negligence of a servant in a different employment.

There is no right to damages where there is no wrong. It is not necessary that there should be a tort, strictly so called—a wilful wrong, an act involving moral guilt. The wrong may be either a wilful, malicious injury, or one committed through mere motives of interest, as in many cases of conversion of goods, trespasses on land, etc.; or, it may consist of a mere neglect to discharge a duty, with suitable skill or fidelity, as where an officer is held liable for the escape of his prisoner, or a carrier for neglect to deliver goods; or a simple breach of contract, as in case of refusal to deliver goods sold, or to perform services under an agreement; or it may be a wrong of another person for whose act or default a legal liability exists, as where a master is held liable for an injury done by his servant, or apprentice, or a railroad company for an accident resulting from the negligence of their engineer. But there must be something which the law recognizes as a wrong, some breach of a legal duty, some violation of legal right, some default or neglect, some failure in responsibility, sustained by the party claiming damages. For the sufferer by accident, or by the innocent or rightful acts of another, cannot claim indemnity for his misfortune; it is called damnum absque injuria—(a loss without a wrong), for which the law gives no remedy.[g] The obligation violated must also be one owed to the plaintiff. The neglect of a duty which the plaintiff had no legal right to enforce gives no claim to damages. Thus, where the postmaster of Rochester, New York, was required by law to publish lists of letters uncalled for in the newspaper having the largest circulation, and the proprietors of the "Rochester Daily Democrat" claimed to have the largest circulation, and to be entitled to the advertising, but the postmaster refused to give it to them, it was held that no action would lie against him for the loss of the profits of the advertising. The duty to publish in the paper having the largest circulation was a duty not owed to the publisher of that paper. It was imposed upon the postmaster, not for the benefit of publishers of newspapers, but for the advantage of persons to whom letters were addressed, and they alone had a legal interest to enforce it.[h]

ASSESSMENT of damages is made by the court through its proper officer or clerk, where it is a mere matter of calculation; in other cases it must be done by the jury.

DAMAGE FEASANT are those injuries committed by animals belonging to one person upon the land of another, by feeding, treading down the grass, corn, or other productions of the soil.[i]

DOUBLE OR TREBLE damages are in some cases allowed by statute. In these cases the actual damage is doubled or trebled, and not assessed like double or treble costs.

EXCESSIVE OR INADEQUATE.

Even in that large class of cases in which there is no fixed measure of damages, but they are left to the discretion of the jury, the court has a certain power to review the verdict, and to set it aside if the damages awarded are grossly excessive or unreasonably inadequate. The rule is, however, that a verdict will not be set aside for excessive damages unless the amount is so large as to satisfy the court that the jury have been misled by passion, prejudice, ignorance, or partiality.[j] But this power is very sparingly used; and cases are numerous in which the courts have expressed themselves dissatisfied with the verdict, but have refused to interfere on the ground that the case did not come within this rule.[k] As a general rule, in actions of tort the court will not grant a new trial on the ground of the smallness of damages.[l] But they have power to do so in a proper case; and in a few instances in which the jury have given no redress at all, when some was clearly due, the verdict has been set aside.[m]

In cases where there is a fixed legal rule regulating the measure of damages, it must be stated to the jury upon the trial. The failure to state it correctly is ground of exception. And if the jury disregard the instructions of the court on the subject, their verdict may be set aside. In so far, however, as the verdict is an honest determination of the questions of fact properly within this province, it will not, in general, be disturbed.[n]

EXEMPLARY.

In actions for torts, strictly so called, where gross fraud or actual malice, or deliberate violence, or oppression appears, the jury are not confined to a strict compensation for the plaintiff's loss, but may, in assessing damages, allow a sum as a punishment of the defendant for his wrong committed upon the plaintiff. Such an allowance is termed "smart money," or "exemplary," "vindictive," or "punitive" damages. They are assessed in one sum, with any allowance the jury may think proper to make as compensation for the actual loss sustained; and the whole sum is awarded to the injured party.

The propriety of allowing damages to be given by way of punishment under any circumstances has been strenuously denied in many cases, and the question has given rise to extensive discussion; but the weight of authority is decidedly that such allowance in a suitable case is proper.[o] But they should be carefully denied whenever the defendant is criminally liable to punishment for the wrong done, by indictment and fine, or otherwise.[p]

LIQUIDATED. Where there is an agreement between the parties for the doing or not doing particular acts, the parties may, if they please, estimate beforehand the damages to result from a breach of the agreement, and prescribe in the agreement itself the sum to be paid by either by way of damages for such breach.[q]

The sum named in an agreement as damages to be paid in case of a breach will, in general, be considered as liquidated damages, or as a penalty, according to the intent of the parties. The mere use of the words "penalty" or "liquidated damages" will not be decisive of the question if, on the whole, the instrument discloses a different intent.[r]

Such a stipulation in agreement will be considered as a penalty merely, and not as liquidated damages, in the following cases: Where the parties in the agreement have expressly declared it, or described it as a "penalty," and no other intent is deducible from the instrument;[s] where it is doubtful on the language of the instrument whether the stipulation was intended as a penalty or as liquidated damages;[t] where the agreement was evidently made for the attainment of another object or purpose, to which the stipulation is wholly collateral;[u] where the agreement imposes several distinct duties or obligations of different degrees of importance, and yet the same sum is named as damages for a breach of either indifferently;[v] where the agreement is not under seal, and the damages are capable of being certainly known and estimated;[w] where the instrument provides that a larger sum shall be paid, upon default to pay a lesser sum in the manner prescribed.[x]

The stipulation will be sustained as liquidated damages in the following cases: Where the agreement is of such a nature that the damages are uncertain, and are not capable of being ascertained by any satisfactory and known rule;[y] where, from the tenor of the agreement, or from the nature of the case, it appears that the parties have ascertained the amount of damages by fair calculation and adjustment.[z]

CARRIERS. Upon a total failure to deliver goods, the carrier is liable for the value of the goods at their place of destination, with interest, deducting the freight.[b] Upon a failure to take the goods at all for transportation, he is liable for the difference between the value at the place of shipment and at the place of destination, less his freight; or, if another conveyance can be found, the difference between the freight agreed on with the defendant, and the sum (if greater) which the shipper would be compelled to pay another carrier.[c] Upon a delay to deliver the goods, the plaintiff is entitled to an indemnity for his loss incurred by the delay, taking into account any fall in the market occurring between the time when the property should have been delivered by the carrier, and the time when it actually was.[d]

See title BAILMENTS, ante.

CONTRACTS. Where a contract prescribes a price to be paid, the compensation recoverable for a part performance will be measured by the contract price if practicable, and not by the actual value of the services or goods, etc., furnished.

Where a vender of real property fails to convey according to his contract, a distinction is taken, in many cases, growing out of the motive of the party in default. If he acted in good faith and supposed he had good title and could convey, the purchaser's damages have been limited to the amount of his advance, if any, interest and expenses of examining the title.[e] But in case of a wilful and fraudulent refusal to convey, the purchaser has been held entitled to the value of the land with interest.[f]

SALES. Where the seller of chattels fails to perform his agreement, the measure of damages is the difference between the contract price and the market value of the article at the time and place fixed for delivery.[g] The same rule applies as to the deficiency where there is a part delivery only.[h] Where, however, the purchaser has paid the price in advance, the purchaser is allowed the highest market price up to the time of the trial. Where the purchaser refuses to take and pay for the goods, the seller may sell them fairly, and charge the buyer with the difference between the contract price and the best market price obtainable within a reasonable time after the refusal. Where the goods are delivered and received, but do not correspond in quality with a warranty given, the vendee may recover the difference between the value of the goods delivered and the value they would have had if they had corresponded with the contract.

See GENERAL STATUTES.

MITIGATION of damages is often effected by matters which are no answer to the action itself, but which may often be given in evidence to reduce or diminish the amount of the penalty or punishment.

NOMINAL. Whenever any act injures another's right, and would be evidence in future in favor of a wrong-doer, an action may be obtained for an invasion of the right without proof of any specific injury.[i] And whenever the breach of an agreement, or the invasion of a right, is established, the law infers some damage, and, if none is shown, will award a trifling sum; as, a penny, one cent, six and a quarter cents, etc.[j] Thus, such damages may be awarded in actions for flowing lands;[k] injuries to commons [l] trespass to lands;[m] neglect of official duties, in some cases;[n] breach of contract;[o] and in many other cases where the effect of the suit will be to determine a right.[p]

DOMICIL. See EVIDENCE; DEATH; PRACTICE.

DOMICIL is that place where a man has his true, fixed, and permanent home, and principal establishment, and to which, whenever he is absent, he has the intention of returning.[a]

Domicil may be either national or domestic. In deciding the question of national domicil, the point to be determined will be in which of two or more nationalities a man has his domicil. In deciding the matter of domestic domicil, the question is, in which subdivision of a nation does a person have his domicil. Thus, whether a person is domiciled in England or France would be a question of national domicil; whether in Norfolk or Suffolk county a question of domestic domicil. This distinction is to be kept in mind, since the rules for determining the two domicils, though frequently, are not necessarily the same.[b]

Legal residence, inhabitability, and domicil are generally used as synonymous;[c] but much depends on the connection and purpose.[d] Two things must concur to establish domicil. These two must exist, or must have existed, in combination.[e] There must have been an actual residence.[f] The character of the residence is of no importance;[g] and if it has once existed, mere temporary absence will not destroy it, however long continued;[h] as, in the case of a soldier in the army.[i] And the law favors the presumption of a continuance of domicil.[j] The original domicil continues till it is fairly changed for another,[k] and revives with an intention to return.[l] This principal of revival, however, does not apply where both domicils are domestic.[m] Mere taking up residence is not sufficient, unless there be an intention to abandon the former domicil;[n] nor is intention of constituting domicil alone sufficient, unless accompanied by some acts in furtherance of such intention.[o] A subsequent intent may be grafted on a temporary residence.[p] Removal to a place with an intention of remaining there for an indefinite period, and as a place of fixed present domicil, constitutes domicil, though there be a floating intention to return.[q] Both inhabitantcy and intention are to a great extent matters of fact, and may be gathered from slight indications.[r] The place where a person lives is presumed to be the place of domicil until facts establish the contrary.[s]

Domicil is of three kinds: 1, domicil by birth; 2, domicil by choice, and, 3, domicil by operation of law. The place of birth is the domicil by birth, if at that time it is the domicil of the parents.[t] If the parents are on a journey, the actual domicil of the parents will generally be the place of domicil.[u] Children of ambassadors, and children born on seas, take the domicil of their parents.[v] The domicil of an illegitimate child is that of the mother;[w] of a legitimate child, that of the father.[x] The domicil by birth of a minor continues to be his domicil till changed.[y] Domicil by choice is that domicil which a person of capacity, of his free will, selects to be such. Residence by constraint, which is involuntary by banishment, arrest, or imprisonment, will not work a change of domicil.[z] Domicil is conferred in many cases by operation of law, either expressly or consequentially. Children born in foreign lands of parents who are at the time citizens of the United States, have their domicil of birth in the United States.[a]

The domicil of the husband is that of the wife.[b] A woman on marriage takes the domicil of her husband, and the husband, if entitled to a divorce, may obtain it, though the wife be actually resident in a foreign State.[c] But, if entitled to a divorce, the wife may acquire a separate domicil, which may be in the same jurisdiction The domicil of a widow remains that of her deceased husband until she makes a change.[d] The domicil of the ward follows that of the guardian,[e] especially where the guardian is a parent.[f] Ambassadors and other foreign ministers retain their domicil in the country to which they belong, and which they represent.[g] This does not apply to consuls and other commercial agents.[h]

A commercial domicil is acquired by maintenance of a commercial establishment in a country, in relation to transactions connected with such establishments.[i]

CHANGE OF DOMICIL. Any person, sui juris, may make any bona fide change of domicil at any time.[j] And the object of the change does not affect the right, if it be a genuine change with real intention of permanent residence.[k] Children follow the domicil of the father, if the change be made bona fide;[l] but there are limitations to this power in the case of alien parents,[m] and of the mother, if a widow;[n] not, however, if she acquires a new domicil by re-marriage.[o] The guardian has the same power over his ward as a parent has over his child.[p] The domicil of a lunatic may be changed with the direction, or with the assent, of his guardian.[q] It may be considered questionable whether the guardian can change the national domicil of his ward.[r] The husband may not change his domicil after committing an offence which entitles the wife to a divorce, so as to deprive her of her remedy;[s] and the wife may not in the like case acquire a new domicil.[t]

DEATH. The presumption of death arises after the absence of a person from his domicil for seven years without having been heard from.[u] See title EVIDENCE, post.

RESIDENCE is a personal presence in a fixed and permanent abode.[v] A residence differs from a domicil, although it is a great matter of importance in determining the place of domicil.[w] Residence and habitancy are usually synonymous.[x] Residence indicates permanency of occupation, as distinct from lodging, or boarding, or temporary occupation, but does not include so much as domicil, which requires an intention combined with residence.[y]

RETURN. See above.

SETTLEMENT, or a residence under such circumstances as to entitle a person to support or assistance in case of becoming a pauper, is obtained in various ways. 1. By birth. 2. By the legal settlement of the father in case of minor children. 3. By marriage. 4. By continued residence. 5. By payment of requisite taxes. 6. By lawful exercise of a public office. 7. By hiring and service for a specified time. 8. By serving an apprenticeship, and perhaps some others which depend upon the statutes of the particular State.[z]

EQUITY. See EVIDENCE; LAW; PLEADING; PRACTICE.

EQUITY is natural justice—justice between contending parties. It is a branch of remedial justice which affords relief to suitors in courts of equity.

The difference between the remedial justice of the courts of common law and that of courts of equity is marked and material. That administered by the courts of law is limited by the principles of the common law (which are to a great extent positive and inflexible), and especially by the nature and character of the process and pleadings, and of the judgments which those courts can render, because the pleadings cannot fully present all the matters in controversy, nor can the judgment be adapted to the special exigencies which may exist in particular cases. It is not uncommon, also, for cases to fail in these courts, from the fact that too few or too many persons have been joined as parties, or because the pleadings have not been framed with sufficient technical precision.

The remedial process of courts of equity, on the other hand, admits, and generally requires, that all persons having an interest shall be made parties, and makes large allowances for amendments by summoning and discharging parties after the commencement of suit. The pleadings are usually framed so as to present to the consideration of the court the whole case, with its possible legal rights, and all its equities; that is, all the grounds upon which the suitor is or is not entitled to relief, upon the principles of equity. And its final remedial process may be so varied as to meet the requirements of these equities in cases where the jurisdiction of the courts of equity exists, by "commanding what is right, and prohibiting what is wrong." In other words, its final process is varied so as to enable the courts to do that equitable justice between the parties which the case demands, either by commanding what is to be done, or prohibiting what is threatened to be done.

In many States courts possess both law and equity jurisdiction.

In equity there are certain rules and maxims which are of special importance:

1. "Equity once having jurisdiction" of a subject-matter, because there is no remedy in law, or because the remedy is inadequate, "does not lose the jurisdiction," merely because the courts of law afterwards give the same or similar relief.

2. "Equity follows the law," except in relation to those matters which give a title to equitable relief because the rules of law would operate to sanction fraud or injustice in the particular case.

3. "When there is equal equity the law must prevail." For if one's adversary has an equally equitable case, the complainant has no more title to relief than his adversary; therefore equality is equity.

4. "Equality is equity." Cases of apportionment of money, or of contribution among those benefited or liable, abatement of claims on account of deficiency of the means of payment, etc., etc., are examples.

5. "He who seeks equity must do equity." A party cannot claim judicial interposition for relief unless he will do what it is equitable as a condition precedent to that relief.

6. "Equity considers done that which ought to have been done." Thus, where there is an agreement for the sale of land, and the vendor dies, the land may be treated as money, and the proceeds of the sale, when completed, go to the distributees of personal estate instead of the heir. If the vendee dies before the completion of the purchase, the purchase-money may be treated as land for the benefit of the heir.

The general nature and jurisdiction of equity exists for the following purposes:

1. For the purpose of compelling a discovery from the defendant, respecting the truth of the matters alleged against him, by an appeal to his conscience to speak the truth. The discovery is enforced by requiring an answer to the allegations in the plaintiff's complaint, in order that the plaintiff may use the matters disclosed in the answer as admissions of the defendant, and thus evidence for the plaintiff, either in connection with and in aid of other evidence offered by the plaintiff, or to supply the want of other evidence on his part; or it may be to avoid the expense to which the plaintiff must be put in procuring other evidence to sustain his case.

Where the plaintiff's complaint (otherwise called a bill) prays for relief in the same suit, the statements of the defendant in his answer are considered by the court in forming a judgment upon the whole case; to a certain extent the statements of the defendant in answer to the bill or complaint are evidence for himself also. The discovery which may be required is not only of facts within the knowledge of the defendant, but may also be of deeds and other writings in his possession.

The right to discovery is not unlimited; as, for instance, the defendant is not bound to make a discovery which would subject him to punishment, nor, ordinarily, to discover the titles upon which he relies for his defence; nor is the plaintiff entitled to require the production of all papers which he may desire to look into. The limits of the right deserve careful consideration. The discovery, when had, may be the foundation of equitable relief in the same suit, in which case it may be connected with all the classes of cases in which relief is sought; or it may be for the purpose of being used in some other court, in which case the jurisdiction is designated as an assistant jurisdiction.

2. Where courts of law do not, or did not recognize any right, and therefore could give no remedy, but where courts of equity recognize equitable rights, and of course give equitable relief. This was denominated exclusive jurisdiction. Of this class are: trusts, charities, forfeited and imperfect mortgages, penalties, and forfeitures, imperfect consideration, etc. In most of the cases which fall under this head, courts of law exercise a concurrent jurisdiction.

3. Where the courts of equity administer equitable relief for the infraction of legal rights in cases in which courts of law, recognizing the right, give a remedy according to their principles, modes, and forms, but the remedy is deemed by equity inadequate; this is called concurrent jurisdiction. It embraces fraud, mistake, accident, administration, legacies, contribution, and cases where justice and conscience require the cancellation or reformation of instruments, or the recission, or the specific performance of contracts.

The courts of law relieve against fraud, mistake, and accident where a remedy can be had according to their modes and forms; but there are many cases in which the legal remedy is made equal to the purposes of justice. The modes of investigation and the peculiar remedies of the court of equity are often of the greatest importance in this class of cases. Transfers to defeat or delay creditors and purchasers without notice of an outstanding title come under this head of fraud. The court does not relieve in all cases of accident or mistake.

In many cases the circumstances are such as to require the cancellation or reformation of written instruments, or of specific performance of contracts, instead of damages for the breach of them.

4. Where the court of equity administers the remedy because the relations of the parties are such that there are impediments to a legal remedy, as, for instance, in cases of partnership, joint tenancy, marshalling of assets, and the like. From the nature of a partnership there are impediments to suits at law between the several partners and the partnership in relation to matters involved in the partnership; and impediments of a similar character exist in other cases.

5. Where the forms of proceeding in the courts of law are not deemed adequate to the due investigation of the particulars and details of the case. This class includes accounts, partition, dower, ascertainment of boundaries.

6. Where, from a relation of trust and confidence, or from consanguinity, the parties do not stand on equal ground in their dealings with each other, as, the relations of parent and child, guardian and ward, attorney and client, principal and agent, executor and administrator, legatees and distributees, trustee and cestui qui trust, etc.

Cases of this class are sometimes considered under the head of constructive fraud.

7. Where the court grants relief from considerations of public policy, because of the mischief which would result if the court did not interfere. Of this class are marriage brokerage agreements, contracts in restraint of trade, buying and selling public offices, agreements founded on corrupt considerations, usury, gaming, and contracts with expectant heirs.

Cases of this class are sometimes considered under the head of constructive fraud.

8. Where a party, from incapacity to take care of his rights, is under the special care of the court of equity, as infants, idiots, and lunatics, which is exercised through committees or guardians.

9. Where the court recognizes an obligation on the part of a husband to make provision for the support of his wife, or to make a settlement upon her, out of the property which comes to her by inheritance or otherwise. This jurisdiction is not founded upon either trust or fraud, but is originally derived from the maxim "that he who asks equity should do equity."

10. Where the equitable relief appropriate to the case consists in restraining the commission or continuance of some act of which the defendant administered by means of a writ of injunction.

11. Where the court aids in the procuration or preservation of evidence of the rights of a party, to be used, if necessary, in some subsequent proceeding, the court administering no final relief.

PLEADING. A suit in equity is ordinarily instituted by a complaint or petition, called a bill, and the defendant is served with a writ of summons, called a subpœna, requiring him to appear and answer.

The forms of proceedings in equity are such as to bring the rights of all persons interested before the court; and, as a general rule, all persons interested should be made parties to the bill, either as plaintiffs or defendants. There may be amendments of the bill, or a supplemental bill; which is sometimes necessary when the case is beyond the stage for amendment. In case the suit fails by the death of the party, there is a bill of revivor, and after the cause is disposed of there may be a bill of review.

The defence is made by demurrer, plea, or answer. Discovery may be obtained from the plaintiff, and further matter may be introduced by means of a cross bill, brought by the defendant against the plaintiff, in order that it may be considered at the same time.

If the plaintiff elects, he may file a replication to the defendant's answer.

The final process is directed by the decree, which being a special judgment can provide relief according to the nature of the case. This is sometimes by a perpetual injunction.

There may be a bill to execute, or to impeach a decree.

PRACTICE. The rules of evidence, except as to the effect of the answer and the taking of the testimony, are, in general, similar to the rules of evidence in cases of law. But to this there are exceptions.

The answer, if made on oath, is evidence for the defendant so far as it is responsive to the bill for discovery, and as such it prevails, unless it is overcome by something more than what is equivalent to the testimony of one witness. If without oath, it is a mere pleading, and the allegations stand for proof.

If the answer is incomplete or improper, the plaintiff may except to it, and it must be so amended as to be made sufficient and proper. The case may be heard on the bill and answer if the plaintiff so elects, and sets the case down for hearing in that mode.

If the plaintiff desires to controvert any of the statements in the answer, he files a replication by which he denies the truth of the allegations in the answer, and testimony is taken. The testimony was formerly taken upon interrogatories filed in the clerk's office, and propounded by the examiner; this practice is extensively modified. If any of the testimony is improper, there is a motion to suppress it.

The case may be referred to a master to state the accounts between the parties, or to make such other report as the case may require. The examination of parties may be in the master's office. Exceptions may be taken to his report.

The hearing of the case is before the equity judge, who may make interlocutory orders or decrees, and who pronounces the final decree or judgment. There may be a re-hearing, if sufficient cause is shown.

ESTATE includes: 1. In its widest sense everything of which real or personal property may consist.[x] 2. In its more limited sense it applies to lands.

ALIENATION. See CONVEYANCES.[y]

BOUNDARIES. See REAL PROPERTY.

CONTINGENT ESTATES depend upon events which may or may not happen; as, an estate limited to a person not in being, or not yet born.[z]

COPARCENARY ESTATES are those where several persons hold as one heir, whether male or female; they have three unities of time, title, and possession, but the interest of the coparceners may be unequal.[a]

CURTESY. Estates by the curtesy are those to which the husband is entitled upon the death of his wife, in the lands and tenements of which she was seized in fee simple or entail during their marriage, provided they have had lawful issue born alive and possibly capable of inheriting her estate.[b] It is the freehold estate for the term of his natural life.[c]

EXECUTED ESTATES are those whereby the present interest passes to and resides in the tenant, not dependent upon any subsequent circumstance or contingency. They are also called estates in possession.[d]

EXECUTORY ESTATES are those interests which depend for their enjoyment upon some subsequent event or contingency, as an executory devise, executory remainder, etc.

FEE SIMPLE ESTATES are those given to one and their heirs absolutely without any end or limit, etc. See CONVEYANCES, ante.

FEE TAIL ESTATE. See CONVEYANCES, ante.

FUTURE ESTATES commence in possession at a future day, either without the intervention of a precedent estate, or on the determination by lapse of time, or otherwise, of a precedent estate created at the same time, thus excluding reversions, which cannot be said to be created at the same time because they are a remnant of the original estate remaining in the grantor.

INHERITANCE—Are those estates which may descend to one's heirs.[e] All freehold estates are estates of inheritance, except estates for life.[f]

INSOLVENT ESTATES are in general the subject of statutory regulation.

JOINTURE is a joint estate limited to both husband and wife.[g] It is a competent livelihood of freehold for the wife of lands and tenements, to take effect, in profit or possession, immediately after the death of the husband, for the life of the wife at least; to make a good jointure the following circumstances must concur: 1. It must take effect, either in possession or profit, immediately from the death of the husband. 2. It must be for the wife's life, or for some greater estate. 3. It must be limited to the wife herself, and not to any other person in trust for her. 4. It must be made in satisfaction for the wife's whole dower, and not of a part of it only. 5. The estate limited to the wife must be expressed or averred to be in satisfaction of her whole dower. 6. It must be made before marriage. A jointure attended with all these circumstances is binding on the widow, and is a complete bar to her dower; or, rather, it prevents the existence of dower. But there are other modes of limiting an estate to a wife which are good jointures, provided the wife accepts them after the death of the husband. She may, however, reject them, and claim her dower.[h]

JOINT TENANCY is the estate which subsists between several persons in any subject of property in equal shares by purchase.[i] The right of survivorship is the distinguishing characteristic of this estate.[j]

LEGAL ESTATES are those the right to which may be enforced in a court of law; they are distinguished from equitable estates, the right to which can be established only in a court of equity.[k]

LIFE ESTATES are freeholds, not of inheritance, but which is held by the tenant for his own life, or the life or lives of others, or for an indefinite period, which may endure for the life or lives of persons in being; and not beyond the period of a life.[l] Where the measure of duration is the tenant's own life it is called an estate "for the tenant's own life." When the measure of duration is the life of another person it is called an estate "per autre vie" (for another's life).[m] These estates may be created by act of the laws, or of the parties. The chief incidents to estates for life are a right to take therefrom the necessary timber and natural material for fuel, fencing, repairs, and agricultural purposes, and a freedom from injury by a sudden termination or disturbance of the estate. Under-tenants have the same privileges as the original tenant, and acts of the original tenant which would destroy his own claim to these privileges will not affect them.[n] Their right, however, does not, of course, as against the superior owner, extend beyond the life of the original tenant.[o]

PARTICULAR ESTATES are those which are carved out of larger estates, and which precedes a remainder; as, an estate for life to A., remainder to B. in tail. This precedent estate is called the particular estate.[p]

REMAINDER. See REAL PROPERTY.

REVERSION is the residue of an estate left in the grantor to commence in possession after the determination of some particular estate granted out by him.[q] It is the residue of an estate which always continues in him who made a particular grant.[r]

SEIZIN. See CONVEYANCES; REAL PROPERTY.

SEPARATE ESTATES are those which belong to one only of several persons; as, the separate estate of a partner, which does not belong to the partnership.[s] A separate estate of a married woman is that which belongs to her, and over which her husband has no control. It may be either lands or chattels, or both.[t]

SEVERALTY. Estates in severalty are those held by a tenant in his own right only, without any other being joined or connected with him in point of interest during the continuance of his estate.[u]

SUFFERANCE. An estate at sufferance is the interest of a tenant who has come rightfully into possession of lands by permission of the owner, and continues to occupy the same after the period for which he is entitled to hold by such permission.[v] This estate seldom occurs, but is recognized as so far an estate that the landlord must enter before he can bring ejectment against the tenant.[w] If the tenant has personally left the house the landlord may break in the doors,[x] and the modern rule seems to be that the landlord may use force to regain possession, subject only to indictment if any injury is committed against the public peace.[y]

UNITY. In a joint estate there must exist four unities: 1. That of interest, for a joint tenant cannot be entitled to one period of duration or quantity of interest in lands and the other to a different; one cannot be tenant for life, and the other for years. 2. That of titles, and therefore their estates must be created by one and the same act. 3. That of time, for their estates must be vested at one and the same period, as well as by one and the same title; and, 4. That of possession. Hence joint tenants each have an entire possession, as well of every parcel as of the whole.[z]

Co-parceners must have the unities of interest, title, and possession.

Tenancies in common require only the unity of possession.[a]

WILL. Estates strictly at will are of unfrequent occurrence, being generally turned into estates for years, or from year to year, by the decisions of the court or by statute.[b] See SUFFERANCE, above; YEARS, below.

YEARS. Estates for years are interests in lands by virtue of a contract for the possession of them for a definite and limited period of time.[c] Such estates are frequently called terms. The length of time for which the estate is to endure is of no importance in ascertaining its character, unless otherwise declared by statute.[d]

ADMINISTRATION is the management of the estate of an intestate person, under a commission from the proper authority, is called administration. The management of the estate of an intestate, or of a testator who has no executor.[e]

The term is generally applied as denoting the management of an estate by an executor, and also the management of the estates of inebriates, intestates, lunatics, minors, non compotes mentis, spendthrifts, testators, etc., in those cases where guardians and trustees have been appointed by authority of law to take charge of such estates in place of the legal owners.

ADMINISTRATION AD INTERIM. Where any considerable time has elapsed since the decease of the testator or intestate, letters of administration may be granted at once, even where a will is supposed to exist, to continue only till the executor shall prove the will, or some other steps shall be taken to compel its production.[f] See ADMINISTRATION TO COLLECT AND PRESERVE, ETC., below.

AUXILIARY OR ANCILLARY ADMINISTRATION is subordinate to the principal administration, for collecting the estates of foreigners. It is taken out in the country where the assets are locally situate.[g] For the authority of a personal representative is strictly limited to the State from which it is derived. Still there are some exceptions to this rule; thus, an executor or administrator, after perfecting his title to personal property of the estate by due proof, and obtaining proper letters, may maintain an action in his own name without describing himself as executor or administrator, for the recovery of damages for any injury done to any of the personal property of the estate, after the decease of the testator or intestate, such action being founded, not upon the title of the deceased, but upon that of his personal representative, as such,[h] and this wherever the goods may be carried, found, or withheld, and whether in his custody or not. So, too, where the title to the property in possession, and even in choses in action of a negotiable nature, becomes perfected under the administration in one state or country, any action requisite to vindicate and enforce such title in any other or foreign state or country may be maintained without recourse to any local administration. But beyond these and similar exceptional cases, the authority of an executor or administrator is limited to the state or country where it is granted.

ADMINISTRATION TO COLLECT AND PRESERVE goods about to perish, is granted where there is no executor or administrator, and is governed entirely by statute which limits and qualifies the administrator's power over them.

ADMINISTRATION DE BONIS NON is granted where a former administrator dies leaving a portion of the estate of a deceased unadministered. The person so appointed has in general the powers of a common administrator.[i] But an administrator de bonis non does not succeed to any special trust reposed in the former representative.[j] Such administrator derives his title from the decedent, and not from the former executor or administrator.[k] His liability is therefore restricted to the goods remaining unadministered.[l]

ADMINISTRATION DURING ABSENCE of the executor, and until he has proven the will, is generally granted when the next of kin (being nominated as executor, or primarily entitled to the administration) is beyond the sea, out of the country or State, lest the goods perish or the debts be lost. But appointment of an administrator temporarily, on account of the non-residence or other cause, that the primary administrative cannot conveniently administer, is not allowable: there should be a general and responsible representative of the estate appointed within the jurisdiction. Still courts of probate appoint administrators and issue letters testamentary to non-residents; but where, for any cause, it is important to institute suits, either in law or equity, against the representative of the estate, it is essential that he should be found in the jurisdiction of the court.

ADMINISTRATION DURING MINORITY is granted when executor, or next of kin, or other party entitled to administer, is a minor. In either case the court is compelled to select some other person, either temporarily or permanently. Such administrator may collect assets, pay debts, sell perishable property, and perform such other acts as require immediate attention. Such administrator has all the authority, for the time being, of a general administrator. He must manage in a prudent manner.[m] He may assent to a legacy, sue and be sued[n] for debts of the deceased, and may retain for his own debt.[o] As the office expires by its own limitation upon the regular representative coming of full age, it is generally proper, in suits for or against such administrator, to allege that the regular representative is under age; and so especially where such administrator is plaintiff, this being a matter specially within his knowledge.[p] He must render his accounts to the probate court the same as any other administrator.[q] Where there are several executors, all under age, the administration during minority will cease upon any one coming of age.[r]

FOREIGN ADMINISTRATION is exercised by virtue of authority properly conferred by a foreign jurisdiction. It is a general rule that letters of administration granted abroad give no authority to sue or be sued in another jurisdiction (with exception above noted), though they may be ground for new probate authority.[s] Hence, where persons are domiciled in one country, as A., and have personal property in another, as B., the authority must be had in B., but exercised according to the laws of A.[t] There is no legal privity between administrators in different States. The principal administrator is to act in the intestate's domicil, and the auxiliary or ancillary administrator is to collect claims and pay debts in the foreign jurisdiction, and pay over the surplus to his principal.[u] It has been held that the probate of a will in a foreign State, if duly authenticated, dispenses with the necessity of taking out new letters,[v] and that possession of property may be taken in a foreign State, but that suit cannot be brought without taking out letters in that State.[w]

ADMINISTRATION PENDENTE LITE is granted pending litigation,[x] respecting an alleged will or right of appointment. An officer of the court is appointed to take care of the estate only till the suit terminates.[y] The general duty of such administrator is to represent the estate during the pendency of the litigation, and in the meantime to see that no detriment comes to the goods or effects of the estate.[z] He is merely an agent or officer of the court, and when the litigation is determined he must relinquish his office, and surrender all the estate in his hands to the rightful representative.[a] His authority merely extends to collecting the assets and preserving them, and not to investing or distributing them.[b] He cannot use the money of the estate or invest it, and is not, therefore, liable for interest during the controversy.[c] And for all the purposes of his administration he may maintain suits.

PUBLIC ADMINISTRATION is performed by a public administrator, by virtue of a statute, in those cases where a person dies intestate, leaving any who are entitled to apply for letters of administration.[d]

SPECIAL OR LIMITED ADMINISTRATION is limited either in duration or extent, time or power. The right of a testator to commit distinct portions of the settlement of his estate to different persons, whether in the same or different countries, is not recognized by our courts,[e] though it has been held that a general grant of administration, during the pendency of a contest for proof of a will, is a nullity,[f] and administrations limited to particular effects, or to the performance of a single act, granted.[g]

ADMINISTRATION, WITH WILL ANNEXED, occurs either:[h] 1. Where no executor is appointed by the will.[i] 2. Where an executor pre-deceases the testator.[j] 3. Where for any cause an executor becomes incompetent to discharge the office, or renounces it. 4. Where, after having proven the will, the testator dies before completing the administration. In this latter class of cases the administrator is also administrator de bonis non. So, also, where the person named executor is limited to his age of majority, either by the terms of the will or the laws of the State, and has not yet arrived at full age, some one must act as administrator with the will annexed in the meantime. And there are other cases where a vacancy in the office of executor may exist either temporarily or permanently, as where the person named executor is not to act until one year after the death of the testator, etc. In general, the duties of the executor wholly devolve on the administrator with the will annexed, so far as they pertain to the settlement and distribution of the estate; but where there are special trusts devolved upon the executor beyond this, which are of longer duration and more strictly personal, those should be devolved upon a trustee specially appointed for that purpose by the proper authority of court. Such administrator must follow the statute rules of distribution, except when otherwise directed by the will.

JURISDICTION over administrations is vested in courts of both general and limited jurisdiction. The officer authorized to delegate the trust is called judge of probate, ordinary, registrar of wills, surrogate, etc., etc.[k] In some States these courts are of special jurisdiction, as county courts, probate or surrogate courts, etc., while in others the power is vested in the courts of general jurisdiction, as the circuit and superior courts.[l] These courts have no jurisdiction until the death of the testator or intestate has taken place. This is generally brought to their notice in the form of an affidavit. A decree of the court is prima facie evidence of such death.[m]

The personal property of a decedent after expenses of last sickness, allowance to widow and minor children, etc., is appropriated to the payment of his debts, so far as required, and, until exhausted, must be first resorted to by creditors. By the general statutes upon the subject the court may grant the administrator power to sell, lease, or mortgage land, when the personal estate of the deceased is not sufficient to pay his debts.[n] Purchasers at such sale get as full title as if they had been distributees; but no warranty can be implied by the administrator's silence.[o] But a fraudulent sale will be annulled by the court.[p]

LIMITATION OF AN ESTATE is the circumscription of the quantity of time comprised in an estate.[q] The definition or circumscription in any conveyance of the interest which the grantee is intended to take.[r] It is used in different senses.

MERGER. When a greater estate and a less meet in one and the same person without any intermediate estate, the less is immediately merged, that is, absorbed in the latter. For example, if there be a tenant for years, and the reversion in fee simple descends to or is purchased by him, the term of years is merged into the inheritance, and no longer exists; but they must be one and the same person, at one and the same time, in one and the same right.[s] The estate in which the merger takes place is not enlarged by the accession of the preceding estate; and the greater or only subsisting estate continues after the merger precisely of the same quantity and extent of ownership as it was before the accession of the estate which is merged, and the lesser estate is extinguished.[t] As a general rule equal estates will not merge in each other; the merger is produced either from the meeting of an estate of higher with an estate of inferior degree, or from the meeting of the particular estate and the immediate reversion in the same person.[u]

SEVERANCE is the destruction of any of the unities of a joint tenancy. It is so called because the estate is no longer a joint tenancy, but is severed. Severance is effected: 1. By alienation of one of the joint tenants, which changes the estate into a tenancy in common. 2. By partition. 3. By purchase or descent of all the shares of the joint tenants so that the whole estate becomes vested in one only.[v]

SURRENDER is the yielding up of an estate for life or years to him who has an immediate estate in reversion or remainder by which a lesser estate is merged in the greater by mutual agreement.[w] It is the deed by which the surrender is made. A surrender is of a nature directly opposite to a release; for as the latter operates by the greater estate descending upon the less, the former is the falling of a less estate into a greater by deed. A surrender immediately divests the estate of the surrenderer and vests it in the surrenderee, even without the assent of the latter.[x] The technical and proper words of this conveyance are "surrender and yield up;" but any form of words by which the intention of the parties is sufficiently manifested will operate as a surrender.[y] The surrender may be express or implied; the latter is when the estate incompatible with the existing estate is accepted or the lessee takes a new lease of the same lands.[z]

TERM is the limitation of an estate; as a term for years, for life, or the like. The word "term" does not merely signify the time specified in the lease, but the estate, also the interest which passes by that lease; and therefore the term may expire during the continuance of the term; as, by surrender, forfeiture, and the like.[a]

TITLE is the means whereby the owner of an estate holds just possession of the same. If bad, it conveys no property. If doubtful, the court will not consider it clear enough to enforce its acceptance by a purchaser, nor so defective as to declare it a bad title, but only subject to so much doubt that a purchaser ought not to be compelled to accept it.[b] If it be marketable a court of equity considers it so clear that it will enforce its acceptance by the purchaser.[c]

There are several stages or degrees requisite to form a complete title to lands. The lowest and most imperfect degree of title is the mere possession, or actual occupation of the estate without any apparent right to hold or continue such possession. This happens when one man dispossesses another. The next step to a good and perfect title is the right of possession which may reside in one man while the actual possession is not in himself but in another; this right of possession is of two kinds: 1. An apparent right of possession, which may be defeated by proving a better; and 2. The actual right of possession, which will stand the test against all occupants.

Title to real property is acquired by either descent or purchase. Title to personal property is acquired: 1. By original acquisition, creation, or occupancy, such as intellectual labor, copyright, and patent property. 2. By transfer by act of the parties, such as by gift, by contract, or by sale; and by transfer by operation of the law, as by forfeiture, succession, marriage, judgment, bankruptcy, insolvency, intestacy.

In general, possession constitutes the title to personal property, because no other means exist by which a knowledge of the fact to whom it belongs can be obtained. A seller of a chattel is not, therefore, required to show the origin of his title; nor, in general, is a purchaser without notice of the claim of the owner, compellable to make restitution; but a purchaser from a tenant for life of personal chattels will not be secure against the claims of those entitled in remainder.[d] Exceptions to the rule that possession is the criterion of title of property are chattels mortgaged, when such mortgage is required by law to be recorded in a public office; bills of sale, under the same requirements, and ships, the title of which can be ascertained by the register.[e]

To convey title, the seller must himself have a title to the property which is the subject of the transfer. But to this general rule there are exceptions. The lawful coin and currency of the United States will pass the property along with the possession. A negotiable instrument, indorsed in blank, is transferable by any person holding it, so as by its delivery to give good title "to any person honestly acquiring it."[f]

EVIDENCE. See AFFIDAVITS; BONDS, NOTES, AND BILLS; EQUITY; LAW; PRACTICE.

EVIDENCE is that which tends to prove or disprove any matter in question, or to influence the belief respecting it. Belief is produced by the consideration of something presented to the mind. The matter thus presented, in whatever shape it may come and through whatever material organ it is derived, is evidence.[a] The word evidence in legal acceptation includes all the means by which any alleged matter of fact, the truth of which is submitted to investigation, is established or disproved.[b] That which is legally submitted to a jury, to enable them to decide upon questions in dispute, or issues, as pointed out by the pleadings, and distinguished from all comment and argument, is termed evidence.[c]

Evidence may be considered with reference to its instruments, the mode of its introduction, its nature, and its object.

The instruments of evidence and mode of their introduction are as follows:

1. JUDICIAL NOTICE OR RECOGNITION. This needs no proof; it is already known and recognized by the court.

2. LAWS. Laws are introduced and proven by printed statute books, or copies from the original rolls, duly exemplified.

3. PERSONAL INSPECTION.

4. PUBLIC DOCUMENTS printed by authority of Congress or the legislature. These are introduced and proven by printed or written copies from the original records, duly exemplified.

5. PUBLIC RECORDS AND COPIES THEREOF, consisting of registers of official transactions made by officers elected or appointed for that purpose. These are introduced and proven by printed copies or by copies from the original records, duly exemplified.

6. RECORDS AND TRANSCRIPTS of proceedings in foreign and domestic courts. These are introduced and proven by copies and transcripts, duly authenticated or exemplified.

7. PRIVATE WRITINGS, as deeds, contracts, wills, etc. These are introduced and proven by the instruments themselves, or copies duly evidenced.

8. TRANSLATIONS. These must be correctly made from the original writing to be introduced in evidence.

TESTIMONY OF WITNESSES is introduced by affidavit, deposition, and oral examination.

The nature or legal character of evidence is as follows:

1. CONCLUSIVE—being such as establishes the fact, and that satisfies the court and jury; that which cannot be controlled or contradicted by any other evidence.

2. PRIMA FACIE—being sufficient, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, to establish a fact.[d]

3. PRIMARY—being the original, the first, the best, and highest degree of evidence of which the case, in its nature, is susceptible.[e]

4. SECONDARY—being such as is admissible when original or primary evidence is lost or destroyed, and which, in such an event, becomes the best evidence.[f]

See COPY; DECLARATION; HEARSAY, below.

The object of evidence is to ascertain the truth between the parties.

It has been discovered by experience that this is done most certainly by the adoption of the following rules:

1. The evidence must be confined to the point in issue.

2. The substance of the issue must be proved; but only the substance is required to be proved.

3. The affirmative of the issue must be proved.

See PROOF, ETC., below.

ACCOUNTS; ACCOUNTS STATED; see title ACCOUNTS, ante.

ACTS; see title ACTS, ante.

ADMISSIONS (concessions or voluntary acknowledgments made by a party, of the existence or truth of certain facts). As distinguished from confessions, the term is applied to civil transactions, and to matters of fact in criminal cases where there is no criminal intent. See post, "CONFESSIONS." As distinguished from consent, an admission may be said to be evidence furnished by the party's own act of his consent at a previous period.

Direct or express admissions are those which are made in direct terms. Implied admissions are those which result from some act, or failure to act, of a party. Incidental admissions are those made in some other connection, or involved in the admission of some other fact.

Admissions may be made by a party to the record, or by one identified in interest with him.[g] Not, however, where the party of record is merely a nominal party, and has no active interest in the suit.[h] They may be made by one of several having a joint interest, so as to be binding upon all.[i] Mere community of interest, as in the case of co-executor,[j] trustees,[k] or co-tenants,[l] is not sufficient. The interest in all cases must have subsisted at the time of making the admissions.[m]

They may be made by any person interested in the subject matter of the suit, though the suit be prosecuted in the name of another person as cestui que trust,[n] or indemnifying creditor in an action against the officer.[o] They may be made by a third person, a stranger to the suit, where the issue is substantially upon the rights of such a person, at a particular time,[i] or who has been expressly referred to for information,[j] or where there is a privity between the ancestor and heir,[k] an assignor or assignee,[l] intestate and administrator.[m] They may be made by an agent so as to bind his principal;[n] so far only, however, as the agent has authority,[o] and not in regard to past transactions.[p] Thus, the admissions of the wife bind the husband so far only as she has authority in the matter,[q] and, so the formal admissions of an attorney bind his client.[r]

Implied admissions may result from assumed character,[s] from conduct,[t] from acquiescence, which is positive in its nature;[u] from possession of documents in some cases.[v]

In civil matters, constraint will not avoid admissions if imposition or fraud were not made use of.

Admissions made in treating for an adjustment cannot be given in evidence where made under faith of a pending treaty.[w]

Judicial admissions,[x] and those which have been acted on by others,[y] and in deeds, as between parties and their privies,[z] are conclusive evidence against the parties making them.

It frequently occurs in practice, that, in order to save expenses as to mere formal proofs, the attorneys on each side consent to admit, reciprocally, certain facts in the cause without calling for proof of them. These are usually reduced to writing, and the attorneys shortly add to this effect, namely: "We agree that the above facts shall, on the trial of this cause, be admitted, and taken as proved on each side;" and signing two copies now called "admissions" in the cause; each attorney takes one.[a]

AFFIDANT. See title AFFIDANTS, ante, and LOST PAPERS, below.

AFFIRMATION. An affirmation is a solemn religious asseveration in the nature of an oath.[b]

Quakers, as a class, and other persons who have conscientious scruples against taking an oath, are allowed to make affirmation in any mode which they may declare to be binding upon their conscience, in confirmation of the truth of the testimony which they are about to give.[c] See OATH, below.

ALIBI. When a person charged with a crime proves that he was at the time alleged in a different place from that in which it was committed, he thus proves an alibi (elsewhere), the effect of which is to lay a foundation for the necessary inference that he could not have committed it.[d] This proof is usually made out by the testimony of witnesses, but may be made by writings properly authenticated.

ALIUNDE is from another place, outside or without the will, judgment, etc., evidence aliunde may be received to explain an ambiguity in a will,[e] but never to impeach a judgment, for a judgment obtained is valid against the world, unless, of course, it be fraudulent, invalid, non-existent, or satisfied.

BELIEF may be stronger or weaker according to the weight of evidence adduced in favor of the proposition under consideration.[f] The conviction of the mind arises, not from actual perception or knowledge, but by way of inference, or from evidence received or information derived from others.

BEST EVIDENCE is not the highest or strongest evidence possible, but the best evidence which the nature of the thing to be proved admits; for example, a copy of a deed is not the best evidence, the deed is better.[g]

BILL OF LADING. See title BONDS, NOTES, AND BILLS, ante.

BLANKS. When a blank is left in a written agreement which need not have been reduced to writing, and would have been equally binding, whether written or unwritten, it is presumed in an action for the non-performance of the contract, parol evidence may be admitted to explain the blank. And where a written instrument has been made professedly to record a fact, is produced as evidence of that fact which it purports to record, and a blank appears in a material part, the omission may be supplied by other proof.[h] Hence a blank left in an award may be supplied.[i] But where a creditor signs a deed of composition, leave the amount of his debt in blank, he binds himself to all existing debt.[j]

BONDS, NOTES, AND BILLS. See that title, ante.

BURDEN OF PROOF. The burden of proof is the duty of proving the facts in dispute on an issue raised between the parties in a cause.

Burden of proof is to be distinguished from prima facie evidence and prima facie case. Generally, when the latter is shown, the duty imposed upon the party having the burden will be satisfied; but it is not necessarily so.[k]

The burden of proof lies upon him who substantially asserts the affirmative of the issue;

but where the plaintiff grounds his case on negative allegations, he has the burden.[f]

In criminal cases, on a twofold ground that a prosecutor must prove every fact necessary to substantiate his charge against a prisoner, and that the law will presume innocence in the absence of convincing evidence to the contrary, the burden of proof, unless shifted by legislative interference, will fall, in criminal proceedings, on the prosecuting party, though in order to convict he must necessarily have recourse to negative evidence.[g] The burden of proof is throughout on the State to make out the whole case; and when a prima facie case is established, the burden of proof is not thereby shifted upon the defendant, and he is not bound to restore himself to that presumption of innocence in which he was at the commencement of the trial.[h]

In general, whenever the law presumes the affirmative, it lies on the party who denies the fact to prove the negative; as when the law raises a presumption as to the continuance of life, the legitimacy of children born in wedlock, or the satisfaction of a debt.

See PROOF OF ISSUE, below.

CHARACTER (opinion generally entertained of a person derived from the common report of the people who are acquainted with him).[i] The moral character of a person in society may be used in proof before a jury in three classes of cases: 1. To afford a presumption that a particular party has not been guilty of a criminal act. 2. To affect the damages in particular cases, where their amount depends on the character and conduct of any individual. 3. To impeach or confirm the veracity of a witness.

OF PARTIES. Where the guilt of an accused party is doubtful, and the character of the supposed agent is involved in question, a presumption of innocence arises from his former conduct in society, as evidenced by his general character; since it is not probable that a person of known probity and humanity would commit a dishonest or outrageous act in the particular instance. But where it is a question of great and atrocious criminality, the commission of the act is so unusual, so out of the ordinary course of things, and beyond common experience—it is so manifest that the offence, if perpetrated, must have been influenced by motives not frequently operating on the human mind—that evidence of character, and of a man's habitual conduct under common circumstances, it must be considered far inferior to what it is in accusations of a lower grade. Against facts strongly proved, good character cannot prevail. It is, therefore, in smaller offences, in such as relate to the actions of daily and common life, as when one is charged with pilfering and stealing, that evidence of a high character for honesty will satisfy a jury that the accused is not likely to yield to so slight a temptation. In such case, where the evidence is doubtful, proof of character may be given with good effect. But still even with regard to the higher crimes, testimony of good character, though of less avail, is competent evidence to the jury, and a species of evidence which the accused has a right to offer. It is the privilege of the accused to put his character in issue, or not. If he does, and offers evidence of a good character, then the prosecution may give evidence to rebut and counteract it. But it is not competent for the government to give in proof the bad character of the defendant, unless he first opens that line of inquiry by evidence of good character.[j]

OF WITNESSES. The party against whom a witness is called may disprove the facts stated by him, or may examine other witnesses as to his general character; but they will not be allowed to speak of particular facts or parts of his conduct.[k] For example, evidence of the general character of a prosecutrix for a rape may be given, as that she was a street-walker; but evidence of specific acts of criminality cannot be admitted.[l] The regular mode of inquiring into the reputation of a witness, is to ask of those introduced for that purpose whether they know the general reputation of the person in question among his neighbors, and what that reputation is. The inquiry must be as to his general reputation where he is best known, or with those among whom he is known, or with those among whom he dwells,[m] and whether from such knowledge he would believe him on his oath.[n] In answer to such evidence against character, the other party may cross-examine the witness as to his means of knowledge, and the grounds of his opinion; or he may attack such witness' general character, or by fresh evidence support the character of his own.[o] A party cannot give evidence to confirm the good character of a witness, unless his general character has been impugned by his antagonist.[p]

See WITNESS, IMPEACHMENT OF, below.

CIRCUMSTANCES. Facts proved are always accompanied by circumstances which more or less influence the mind in forming a judgment. In some instances these circumstances assume the character of irresistible evidence; where, for example, a woman was found dead in a room, with every indication of having met with a violent death, the presence of another person at the scene of action was made manifest by the bloody mark of a left hand visible on her left arm.[f] These points ought to be carefully examined in order to form a correct opinion. The first question is: Is the fact possible? If so, are there any circumstances which render it impossible? If alleged facts are impossible, the witness ought not to be credited. For example: if a man swears that he saw the deceased shoot himself with his own pistol, and, upon examination, the ball which killed him is found too large to enter the pistol, the witness ought not to be credited.[g] So, also, if one swears that another has committed an impossible crime.

COMPETENCY. See CREDIBILITY; WITNESSES, below.

COMMUNICATIONS, CONSULTATIONS, CONFERENCES, CONVERSATIONS, AND THE PROPOSITIONS made at and prior to the contract are no part of the contract, for no parol evidence will be allowed to be given to alter, contradict, or vary a written instrument.[h]

CONCLUSIVE EVIDENCE is that which, while uncontradicted, satisfies the judge or jury. That which cannot be controlled or contradicted by any other evidence. That which establishes the fact, as in the instance of conclusive presumptions. The record of a court of common law jurisdiction is conclusive as to the facts therein stated.[i] Evidence may be conclusive for some purposes, but not for others.

CONCLUSIVE PRESUMPTIONS. See PRESUMPTIONS, below.

CONFESSIONS (voluntary declarations made by a person who has committed a crime or misdemeanor to another, of the agency or participation which he had in the same. An admission or acknowledgment by a prisoner, when arraigned for an offence, that he committed the crime with which he is charged. Judicial confessions are those made before a magistrate, or in court in the due course of legal proceedings. Extra-judicial confessions are those made by the party elsewhere than before a magistrate, or in the open court).

Voluntary confessions are admissible in evidence;[j] but a confession is not admissible in evidence where it is obtained by temporal inducement, by threats, promise, or hope of favor held out to the party in respect of his escape from the charge against him by a person in authority,[k] where there is reason to presume that such person appeared to the party to sanction such threat or inducement;[l] but it is admissible if such inducements proceed from a person not in authority over the prisoner,[m] or if the inducement be spiritual merely;[n] and the temporal inducement must have been held out by the person to whom the confession is made,[o] unless collusion be expected.[p] A confession is admissible, though elicited by questions put to the prisoner by a constable, magistrate, or other person,[q] even though the question assumes the prisoner's guilt, or the confession is obtained by trick or artifice,[r] and although it appears that the prisoner was not warned that what he said would be used against him.[s]

A statement not compulsory, made by a party not at the time a prisoner under a criminal charge, is admissible in evidence against him, although it is made upon oath;[t] otherwise, if the answers are compulsory.[u] A confession may be inferred from the conduct and demeanor of a prisoner when a statement is made in his presence affecting himself,[v] unless such statement is made in the deposition of a witness, or examination of another prisoner before a magistrate.[w]

Where a confession has been obtained, or an inducement held out under circumstances which would render a confession inadmissible, a confession subsequently made is not admissible in evidence; unless from the length of time intervening, from proper warning of the consequences, or from other circumstances, there is reason to presume that the hope or fear which influenced the first confession is dispelled,[x] and the motives proved to have been offered will be presumed to continue, and to have produced the confession, unless the contrary is shown by clear evidence, and the confession will be rejected.[y] Under such circumstances contemporaneous declarations of the party are receivable in evidence, or not, according to the attending circumstances; but any act of the party, though done in consequence of such a confession, is admissible, if it appears from a fact, thereby

Declarations regarded as secondary evidence or hearsay, and yet admitted in some cases: 1. In matters of general and public interest, common reputation being admissible as to matters of public interest;[o] but reputation amongst those only connected with the place of business in question, in regard to matters of general interest merely,[p] and the matter must be of a quasi public nature.[q] 2. In cases of ancient possession, where ancient documents are admitted, if found in a place in which, and under the care of persons with whom such papers might reasonably be expected to be found,[r] if they purport to be a part of the transaction to which they relate.[s] 3. In cases of declarations and entries made against the interest of the party making them, whether made concurrently with the act or subsequently;[t] but such declarations and entries, to be so admitted, must appear or be shown to be against the pecuniary interest of the party making them.[u] 4. Dying declarations made in cases of homicide, where the death of the deceased is the subject of the charge, and the circumstances of the death are the subject of the dying declarations, are admissible[v] if made under a sense of impending death.[w] The declarations may have been made by signs,[x] and in answer to questions.[y] The substance only need be given by the witness,[z] but the declaration must have been complete,[a] and the circumstances under which it was made must be shown to the court.[b]

Declarations to be admissible as original evidence must have been made at the time of doing the act to which they relate.[c]

In order to their admission as secondary evidence, the declarant must be dead,[d] and the declaration must have been made before any controversy arose.[e] It must appear that the declarant was in a condition or situation to know the facts, or that it was his duty to know them.[f]

The declarations of an agent respecting a subject-matter, with regard to which he represents the principal, bind the principal,[g] if made during the continuance of the agency with regard to the transaction then pending;[h] and similar rules extend to partners' declarations.[i] bility of doubt. It shows the contrary position to be absurd or impossible. It is the indubitable evidence of the senses, and of reason.

DEPOSITIONS are written declarations, under oath, made upon notice to the adverse party for the purpose of enabling him to attend and cross-examine, or upon written interrogatories. The difference between a deposition and an affidavit, is the requirement of notice in the former.[n]

Depositions were not formerly allowed in common law courts, but were admitted from necessity where the oral testimony of a witness could not be obtained. In courts of equity this is generally the only testimony which is taken. In most States both oral testimony and depositions are used.

In criminal cases depositions cannot be used without the consent of the defendant,[o] who cannot by constitution be deprived of the right of meeting his accusers face to face. Statutory provisions are made in many States for taking depositions by the accused.[o]

The cases in which depositions may be used, the time of taking, before whom taken, notice of taking, forms, directions and proceedings in taking, transmission, opening, exception to, and their introduction as evidence, are the subjects of special statutory regulation in all the various States.

DIRECT EVIDENCE is that means of proof which tends to show the existence of a fact in question without the intervention of the proof of any other fact. Evidence is termed direct, which applies immediately to the fact to be proved without any intervening process, as distinguished from circumstantial, which applies immediately to collateral facts supposed to have a connection, near or remote, to the fact in controversy.

It is that evidence which, if believed, establishes the truth of the fact in issue, and does not rise from any presumption. Evidence is direct and positive when the very facts in dispute are communicated by those who have the actual knowledge of them by means of their senses.[p] In one sense there is but little direct or positive proof, or such proof as is acquired by means of one's own senses; all other evidence is presumptive; but in common acceptation, direct and positive evidence is that which is communicated by one who has actual knowledge of the fact.

DISCREDIT. In general a party may discredit a witness called by the opposite party who testifies against him, by proving that his character is such as not to entitle him to credit or confidence, or any other fact which shows he is not entitled to belief. It is clearly settled, also, that the party voluntarily calling a witness, cannot afterwards impeach his character for truth and veracity.[q] But if a party calls a witness who turns out unfavorable he may call another to prove the same point.[r]

DISCREPANCY is material where there is such a difference between a thing alleged and a thing offered in evidence as to show they are not substantially the same; as, when the plaintiff in his declaration for a malicious arrest averred that "the plaintiff in that action did not prosecute his said suit, but therein made default;" and the record was "that the plaintiff obtained a rule to discontinue." A discrepancy is immaterial where it does not materially affect the cause, as where a declaration stated that a deed bore the date in a certain year of our Lord, and the deed was simply dated "March 30, 1701."[s]

EFFECT OF EVIDENCE. As a general rule, a judgment rendered by a court of competent jurisdiction directly upon a point in issue, is a bar between the same parties;[t] and privies in blood, as an heir[v] or privies in estate,[w] stand in the same situation as those whom they represent; the verdict and judgment may be used for or against them, and is conclusive. But in order to constitute this bar, and to make a matter res judicata, there must be a concurrence of the four conditions following: 1. Identity of the thing sued for;[x] 2. Identity of the cause of action;[y] 3. Identity of persons, and of parties to the action;[z] 4. Identity of the quality in the persons for or against whom the claim is made.[a]

EXAMINATION (Preliminary) is made concerning a criminal offence, of the grounds which constitute the accusation against a person arrested on a criminal charge with a view of discharging the person so arrested, or to secure his appearance for trial by the proper court, and to preserve the evidence relating to the matter. This is accomplished by bringing the person accused, together with witnesses, before the magistrate (usually a justice of the peace), who hears the case for the purposes above stated, taking down in writing the evidence of the witnesses, and any statements which the prisoner may see fit to make. If no probable cause of the guilt of the prisoner appears, he is discharged from arrest. If sufficient cause of suspicion appears to warrant putting him on trial, he is committed, or required to give bail or enter into a recognizance to appear at the proper time for trial. The witnesses are also frequently required to recognize for their appearance, though in ordinary cases only their personal recognizance is required. The magistrate certifies the minutes of the evidence which he has taken, and it is delivered or transmitted to the court before whom the trial is to be had. See LEADING QUESTIONS, and WITNESSES, below.

The examination should be taken and completed as soon as the nature of the case will admit.[a] The prisoner must not be put upon oath (except where by statute he is competent to testify, and then only when he voluntarily consents), the witnesses must.[b] The prisoner has no right to the assistance of an attorney, but the privilege is granted in the discretion of the magistrate.[c] The magistrate's return and certificate are conclusive evidence, and exclude parol evidence of what the prisoner said on that occasion with reference to the charge.[d] See CONFESSIONS, above.

EXAMINED COPIES, or papers which are copies of records, public books or registers, which have been compared with the originals,[e] are admitted in evidence because of the public inconvenience which would arise if such records, public books, or registers, were removed from place to place, and because any fraud or mistake made in the examined copy would be so easily detected.[f] But in an answer in chancery on which the defendant was indicted for perjury, or where the original must be produced in order to identify the party by proof of handwriting, an examined copy would not be evidence.[g]

EXEMPLIFICATION. See title, AUTHENTICATION, ante.

EXPERTS. Those who are skilled by experience. Witnesses who are admitted to testify on account of their peculiar knowledge of some art or science requisite or of value in settling the point in issue. Such persons are selected by the court or parties in a cause, on account of their knowledge or skill, to examine, estimate, and ascertain, and report their opinions.[h] Persons professionally acquainted with the science or practice in question.[i] Persons conversant with the subject-matter or questions of science, skill, trade, and the like[j] are thus selected, and their opinions received in evidence upon points in issue.

See OPINIONS; WITNESSES, below.

EXTRACTS. In general an extract is not evidence, because the whole of the writing may explain the part extracted, so as to give it a different sense; but sometimes extracts from public books are evidence; as extracts from the registers of births, marriages, and burials, kept according to law, when the whole of the matter has been extracted which relates to the cause or matter in issue.

EXTRINSIC EVIDENCE is external evidence, or that which is not contained in the body of an agreement, contract, and the like.

It is a general rule that extrinsic evidence cannot be admitted to contradict, explain, vary, or change the terms of a contract, or of a will, except in a latent ambiguity, or to rebut a resulting trust.[k]

EYE-WITNESS. See WITNESSES, below.

FACTS. Fact is used in distinction from law. Thus in every case to be tried there are facts to be shown to exist to which the law is to be applied. Material facts are facts essential to the right of action or defence. Material facts must be shown to exist. Immaterial facts need not. The existence of facts is generally determined by the jury, but there are many facts of which the courts take cognizance. See title, ACTS, ante; and JUDICIAL RECOGNITION; PRESUMPTION, below.

HANDWRITING. When it is necessary to prove that a certain instrument or name is in the handwriting of a particular person; this is done either by the testimony of a witness, who saw the paper or signature actually written, or by one who has by sufficient means acquired such a knowledge of the general character of the handwriting of the party as will enable him to swear to his belief that the handwriting of the person is the handwriting in question.[l]

The mode of deducing evidence of the authenticity of a written instrument is, by showing the likeness of the handwriting to that of another instrument proved to be that of the party whom it is sought to establish as the author of the instrument in question.[m] At common law, as a general rule, this manner of obtaining evidence was not allowed. There were exceptions to this rule. 1. Where the writings were of such antiquity that living witnesses could not be procured, but were not old enough to prove themselves.[n] 2. Where other writings admitted to be genuine were already in the case.[k]

The rule on the subject of admitting documents irrelevant to the matter in issue for the purpose of comparison of handwriting is not settled uniformly.

HEARSAY is the evidence, not of what the witness knows himself, but of what he has heard from others. That kind of evidence which does not derive its value solely from the credit to be given to the witness himself, but rests also, in part, on the veracity and competency of some other person.[l]

Such mere recitals or assertions cannot be received in evidence, for many reasons, but principally for the following:[m]

1. That the party making such declarations is not under oath; and,

2. Because the party against whom it operates has no opportunity of cross-examination.[n]

The general rule excluding hearsay evidence does not apply to those declarations to which the party is privy, or to admissions which he himself has made.

The term hearsay evidence applies to written as well as oral matter; but the writing or words are not necessarily hearsay because those of a person not under oath. Thus: information on which one has acted;[o] conversation of a person suspected of insanity;[p] replies to inquiries;[p] general reputation;[q] expressions of feeling;[r] general repute in the family in questions of pedigree;[s] entries made by third persons in the discharge of official duties;[t] entries in a party's shop-book,[u] or other books kept in the regular course of business;[v] and indorsements of partial payments[w] are admissible as original evidence under the circumstances, and for particular purposes.

As a general rule, hearsay reports of a transaction, whether oral or written, are not admissible in evidence.[x] The rule applies to evidence given under oath in a cause between other litigating parties.[y]

Matters relating to public interest, as for example, a claim to a ferry or highway, may be proved by hearsay testimony;[z] but the matter in controversy must be of public interest;[a] the declarations must be those of persons supposed to be dead,[b] and must have been made before the controversy arose.[c] The rule extends to deeds, leases, and other private documents,[d] maps,[e] and verdicts.[f] Ancient documents purporting to be a part of the res gestæ are also admissible, although the parties to the suit are not bound.[g]

See DECLARATIONS, above.

IDENTITY of the things in question must be proved in larceny, replevin, and trover.[h] So, too, the identity of articles taken or injured must be proved in all indictments where taking property is the gist of the offence, and in actions of tort for damage to specific property. Many cases occur in which identity must be proved in regard to either persons or things, the question is sometimes one of great practical difficulty, as in case of the death of strangers, reappearance after long absence, and the like.[i]

IMPEACHMENT is proof that a witness who has been examined is unworthy of belief. Every witness is liable to be impeached as to his character for truth; and, if his general character is good, he is presumed at all times to be ready to support it.[j]

INADMISSIBLE EVIDENCE. See PAROL EVIDENCE, below.

INCONCLUSIVE EVIDENCE. See PRESUMPTIONS, below.

IN CHIEF. Evidence in chief should be confined to such matters as the pleadings and the opening warrants; and a departure from this rule will be sometimes very inconvenient, if not fatal. Suppose, for example, two assaults have been committed, one in January and one in February, and the plaintiff prove his cause of action to have been the assault in January, he cannot abandon that, and afterwards prove another committed in February, unless the pleadings and openings extend to both.[k] The object of this is, to prevent the plaintiff from introducing in evidence a different case from the one which he had prepared the defendant to expect from the pleadings.

INDICIA. See IDENTITY, above.

INDIRECT EVIDENCE is that which does not prove the fact in question directly, but one from which such fact may be presumed. It is inferential evidence as to the truth of a disputed fact, not by testimony of any witness to the fact, but by collateral circumstances ascertained by competent means.[l]

INFERENCES are conclusions drawn from premises established by proof. It is the province of the judge who is to decide upon facts to draw the inference. When the facts are submitted to the court, the judge or judges draw the inference; when they are to be ascertained by a jury, it is their duty to do so. Witnesses are not, as a general rule, permitted to draw an inference and then testify such inference to the court or jury; it is their duty to state the facts simply as they occurred.

Inferences differ from presumptions.

INSCRIPTIONS upon tombstones, rings, and the like, are held to be evidence of pedigree.[m]

See DECLARATIONS; HEARSAY, above.

INTERPRETERS may be sworn to testify (and make translations) whenever necessary.[n] They should be sworn before they translate the testimony of witnesses.[o] A person employed between an attorney and client to act as an interpreter, is considered merely as an organ between them, and cannot be compelled to testify as to what he has acquired in those confidential communications.[p]

INTERROGATORIES. See title EQUITY, ante.

IRRELEVANT EVIDENCE is that which does not support the issue, and which may therefore be excluded.

JUDGES are not allowed to testify to what was made known to them, or took place before them in the hearing of causes.[q] They are not competent witnesses in a cause being tried before them, for, among other reasons, they can hardly be deemed capable of impartially deciding upon the admissibility of their own testimony, or weighing it against that of another.[r]

JUDGES' NOTES—which usually contain a statement of the testimony of witnesses, of documents offered or admitted in evidence, or offers of evidence and whether it was received or rejected, and like matters—are not evidence of what transpired at a former trial, nor can they be read to prove what a deceased witness swore to on such former trial; for they are no part of the record, and he is not officially bound to make them. But in chancery, when a new trial is ordered of an issue sent out of chancery to a court of law, and also, perhaps, where witnesses in a former trial are of an advanced age, an order may be made that, in event of death or inability to attend, their testimony be read from judges' notes.[s]

JUDICIAL NOTICE OR RECOGNITION. There are divers things of which courts take judicial notice, without the introduction of proof by the parties; such as the territorial extent of their jurisdiction, local divisions of their own countries, seats of justice, courts of general jurisdiction, their judges, their seals, their rules and maxims in the administration of justice, their course of proceeding, public acts, laws, etc. If the judge or justice needs information on subjects, he will seek it from such sources as he deems authentic.[t]

All courts, tribunals, and officers, shall take notice of the official signature of any officer of the State, of the United States, or of any State or Territory in the United States.[u]

The several courts of the Commonwealth take judicial notice of all acts and resolutions of the General Assembly.[v]

Although a private act may not be read in evidence, yet if it manifestly appear that it was relied on in the court below, the court of appeals will take judicial notice of it.[w]

LAWS. The existence and the tenor or effect of all foreign laws, beyond the limits of the United States, may be proved by the parol evidence of persons learned in those laws. But if it appear that the law in question is contained in a written statute, the court may reject such parol evidence, unless it be accompanied by a copy of the statute.

The printed laws of the United States, or of any State or Territory, which have been or shall be received in the secretary's (or other authorized) office of this State, and which has been printed under the authority of the United States, of such State or Territory, or a copy thereof, when duly certified by the secretary of such State, may be admitted and received as evidence of such laws.

Any printed volume or pamphlet of laws of any State or Territory, showing on its face that it was published by authority of such State or Territory, is prima facie evidence of the laws contained therein.

Every act of the legislature of any one of the States or Territories of the United States, certified by the secretary, and having the seal of the State or Territory affixed thereto, is deemed authentic, and receives full faith and credit when offered in evidence in any court.

The unwritten or common law of any other State, Territory (or foreign government), may be proved as facts by parol evidence.

The books of reports of cases adjudged in their courts will also be admitted in evidence of such law.

Elementary works on law are not admissible in evidence as to what the law is.[x]

Courts are not to take notice, ex-officio, of the laws of other States. When a question depends on the laws of a sister State, such laws are a part of the evidence in the case, and, like any other fact, must be proved by him who holds the affirmative.[y]

COPIES OF ANY ACT, LAW, OR RESOLUTION contained in the printed statute-books of the States and Territories of the United States, purporting to be printed by authority, and which are now, or may be hereafter, deposited in the office of the secretary of any State, and required by law to be kept there, certified under the hand and seal of office of such secretary, may be admitted as evidence.

PRINTED COPIES OF THE ORDINANCES, RESOLUTIONS, RULES, ORDERS, and BY-LAWS of any city or incorporated town, published by authority of such city or incorporated town, and manuscript copies of the same, certified under the hand of the proper officer, and having the corporate seal of such city or town affixed thereto, may be received as evidence.

LEADING CASES. See title AUTHORITIES, ante.

LEADING QUESTIONS, or questions which put into the witness's mouth the words to be echoed back, or suggest the answers which the party wishes to get from him,[z] cannot, in general, be put to a witness in his examination in chief.[a] But in an examination in chief, questions may be put to lead the mind of the witness to the subject of inquiry, and they are allowed when it appears the witness wishes to conceal the truth, or to favor the opposite party, or where, from the nature of the case, the mind of the witness cannot be directed to the subject of inquiry without a particular specification of such subject.[x]

In cross-examination, the examiner has generally the right to put leading questions.[b]

See WITNESSES, below.

LOST PAPERS. When agreements, contracts, deeds, wills, and the like have been lost, and it is desired to prove their contents, the party must prove that he has made diligent search, and in good faith exhausted all sources of information accessible to him. For this purpose his own affidavit is sufficient.[c] On being satisfied of this, the court will allow secondary evidence to be given of their contents.

See title AFFIDAVITS, ante.

MANIFEST See CONCLUSIVE EVIDENCE, above.

MEDICAL EVIDENCE is that given by physicans and surgeons in their professional capacity. The evidence of a medical witness is strictly that of an expert.[d] A professional witness should not be permitted to make up an opinion to be given in evidence from what other witnesses say of the facts in the case, because he would thus take the place of the jury as to the credibility of the witness, and also determine what part of the testimony of other witnesses applies to the case, a duty that belongs to the court. "If the symptoms and indications testified to by other witnesses are proved, and if the jury are satisfied of the truth of them, the question is, whether in his (the witness's) opinion, the party was insane, and what is the nature and character of that insanity, and what did they indicate, and what would he (the witness) expect would be the condition of such a person in any supposed circumstance."[e] Under this rule the medical witness passes upon the condition of the person whose condition is at issue. To do it correctly he must hear all the evidence that the jury hears; he must judge as to the relevance of the evidence of others; he must make an application of the facts that legally bear upon the case to it, and reject all others: in short, he is judge and jury in the case.

It is not the province of the expert to draw inferences of fact from the evidence, but simply to disclose his opinion on a known or hypothetical state of facts. For this purpose the counsel on each side put to the physicians such states of fact as they deem warranted by the evidence, and take their opinions thereon. If any of these states of fact are considered proved, then the opinions are admissible to be weighed by the jury, otherwise their opinions are not applicable to the case.[f] The attention of the witness being called to a definite state of facts, constituting a hypothetical case, his opinion is then unembarrassed by any collateral questions or considerations, and the jury, under the instructions of the court, determines how far the facts sustain the hypothetical case, and, consequently, how far the opinion of the witness applies to the case under investigation.[g]

A medical witness is not a privileged witness (unless so made by statute), for where the ends of justice absolutely require a disclosure, a medical witness is not only bound, but may be compelled, to give evidence on all matters that will enlighten the case. If a medical man was to voluntarily reveal these secrets, to be sure he would be guilty of a breach of honor and of great indiscretion; but to give that information which, by the law of the land, he is bound to do, will never be imputed to him any indiscretion whatever.

Medical books are not received in evidence. They are subject to the same rule that applies to scientific and other professional books. Even the elementary works on law are not admissible in evidence as to what the law is.[h] Facts or opinions on the subject of insanity, as on any other subject, cannot be laid down before the jury except by the testimony under oath of persons skilled in such matters. Whether stated in the language of the court or of the counsel in a former case, or cited from books of legal or medical writers, they are still statements of facts, and must be proved on oath, etc.[i]

NATURAL PRESUMPTIONS. See PRESUMPTIVE EVIDENCE, below.

NEWLY-DISCOVERED EVIDENCE will afford ground for a new trial; but courts only interfere with verdicts for this cause under very special circumstances. To entitle the party to relief, certain well-defined conditions are indispensable. It is a rule subject to rare exceptions, and applied perhaps with more stringency in criminal than in civil cases, that the sole object of the new evidence must be to impeach or contradict witnesses sworn on a former trial.[l] It must not merely multiply testimony to any one or more facts already investigated, but must bring to light some new and independent truth of a different character;[j] it must be a point before in issue, and be so material as to impress the court with the belief that if a new trial were granted, the result would probably be different;[k] it must not have been known to the party until after the trial;[l] and the least fault in not procuring and using it at the trial must not be imputable to him.[m]

OATHS. An oath is an outward pledge given by the person taking it, that his attestation, or promise, is made under an immediate sense of his responsibility to God.[n] Before testifying, the witness is sworn to testify to the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth. The mode of administering the oath must be such as may be most consistent with, and binding on the conscience of the witness. It may be varied to conform to the religious belief of the individual, so as to make it binding on his conscience.[o] The form of administering the oath in ordinary cases is substantially that of the old Scotch covenanters, omitting the ceremony of having the Bible open before the witness. The Gospels are not now generally used.[p] The witness stands with head uncovered, and right hand uplifted.

A Jew is sworn on the Pentateuch, or Old Testament, with his head covered;[q] a Mahometan on the Koran;[r] a Gentoo, by touching with his hand the foot of a Brahmin, or priest of his religion; a Brahmin, by touching the hand of another such priest;[s] a Chinaman, by breaking a china saucer;[t] Christians are sworn with their hats off, Jews with their hats on.[u]

The witness may be asked before he is sworn, whether he considers the oath he is about to take as obligatory upon his conscience.[v]

Though a witness be an atheist, or does not express what manner of oath is most binding upon his conscience, yet if the court administer an oath to him he is bound by that oath; for all oaths and affirmations alike subject the party who falsifies them to the pains and penalties of perjury.

In general, the word "oath" includes "affirmation;" and the word "swear" includes "affirm."

ONUS PROBANDI. See PROOF, etc., below.

OPINIONS are inferences or conclusions drawn by a witness as distinguished from facts known to him as facts.

It is the province of the jury to draw inferences and conclusions; and if witnesses were in general allowed to testify what they judge as well as what they know, the verdict would sometimes prove, not the decision of the jury, but that of the witnesses. Hence the rule that, in general, the witness cannot be asked his opinion upon a particular question.[l]

Some confusion in the application of this rule arises from the delicacy of the line which divides that which is to be regarded as matter of observation from that which is matter of judgment founded upon observation. Thus, an unprofessional witness may testify to the fact that a person whom he saw was intoxicated, whether he is able to state all the constituent facts which amount to drunkenness or not.[j] But, on the other hand, insanity or mental incapacity cannot, in general, be proved by the mere assertion of an unprofessional witness.[k] So, handwriting may be proved by being recognized by a witness who has seen other writings of the party in the usual course of business, or who has seen him write.[l] But, on the other hand, the authorship of an anonymous article in a newspaper cannot be proved by one professing to have a knowledge of the author's style.[m]

From necessity, an exception to this rule of excluding opinions is made in questions involving matter of science, art, or trade, where skill and knowledge possessed by a witness, peculiar to the subject, give a value to his opinion above that of any inference which the jury could draw from facts which he might state.[n] Such a witness is termed an expert; and he may give his opinion in evidence.

The unwritten or common law of foreign countries may be proved by the opinion of witnesses possessing professional knowledge.[o] So the degree of hazard of property insured against fire;[p] handwriting;[q] mechanical operations, the proper way of conducting a particular manufacture, and the effect of a certain method;[r] negligence of a navigator, and its effect in producing a collision;[s] sanity;[t] impotency;[u] value of chattels;[v] value of land;[w] value of services;[x] benefit to real property by laying out a street adjacent thereto;[y] survey marks identified as being those made by United States surveyors;[z] and sea-worthiness.[a]

Such opinions are taken with the qualifications necessary to make, as far as possible, the judgment of the jury, and not that of the witness, the final means of determining the issue. Thus opinions of experts are not admissible upon the question of damages;[b] and experts are always confined to opinions within the scope of their professions, and are not allowed to give opinions on things of which the jury can as well judge.[c] A distinction is always observed between a feeble impression and a mere opinion or belief.[d]

ORAL TESTIMONY is spoken testimony—used in contradistinction to written. It is delivered by a witness verbally by word of mouth. See PAROL EVIDENCE, below.

ORIGINALS are single or duplicate. Single when there is but one, duplicate when there are two. In the case of printed documents all the impressions are originals, or in the nature of duplicate originals, and any copy will be primary evidence.[e]

When an original document is not evidence at common law and a copy of such original is made evidence by an act of the legislature, the original is not, therefore, made admissible evidence by implication.[f]

PAROL EVIDENCE is that verbally delivered by the witness, by the living voice, by word of mouth. Parol evidence is inadmissible to contradict a written instrument. As to the cases in which such evidence will not be received or rejected.[g]

PERPETUATING testimony is a practice whose origin may be traced to the canon law.[h] Statutes exist in most States for this purpose. Equity also furnishes means, to a limited extent, for this same purpose.

POSITIVE EVIDENCE is distinguished from circumstantial evidence. It is that which, if believed, establishes the truth or falsehood of the fact in issue, and does not arise from any presumption.

PRESUMPTIONS. See PRESUMPTIVE EVIDENCE, below.

PRESUMPTIVE EVIDENCE is any evidence which is not direct and positive.[i] That which shows the existence of one fact by proof of the existence of another, or others, from which the first may be inferred; because the fact or facts shown have a legitimate tendency to lead the mind to the conclusion that the fact exists which is sought to be proved.

CONCLUSIVE PRESUMPTIONS are inferences which the law makes so peremptorily that it will not allow them to be overturned by any proof, however strong.[j] They are called, also, absolute and irrebuttable presumptions.

INCONCLUSIVE OR DISPUTABLE PRESUMPTIONS are inferences of law which hold good until they are invalidated by proof of a stronger presumption.[k] They are called, also, inconclusive presumptions. Presumptive evidence consists of presumptions of law and presumptions of fact.

PRESUMPTIONS OF FACT are not the subject of fixed rules, but are merely natural presumptions, such as appear, from common experience, to arise from the particular circumstances of any case. Some of these are "founded upon the knowledge of the human character, and of the motives, passions, and feelings by which the mind is usually influenced."[l] They are the conclusions drawn by the mind from the natural connection of the circumstances disclosed in each case, or, in other words, from circumstantial evidence.

Circumstantial evidence is sometimes used as synonymous with presumptive evidence; but presumptive evidence is not necessarily, and in all cases, what is usually understood by circumstantial evidence. The latter is not the evidence which tends to prove a disputed fact by proof of other facts which have a legitimate tendency from the laws of nature, the usual connection of things, the ordinary transaction of business, etc., to lead the mind to a conclusion that the fact exists which is sought to be established.[m] Presumptive evidence may sometimes be the result, to some extent, of an arbitrary rule—as in the case of the presumption of death, after an absence of seven years without being heard from—derived by analogy from certain statutes. The jurists and the jury draw conclusions from circumstantial evidence, and find one fact from the existence of other facts shown to them, some of the presumptions being so clear and certain that they have become fixed as rules of law, and others having greater or less weight, according to the circumstances of the case, leaving the matter of fact inquired about in doubt until the proper tribunal to determine the question draws the conclusion.

In giving effect to presumptions of fact, the presumption stands until proof is given of the contrary.[n] This contrary proof may be a conflicting presumption. In such cases the following rules apply: 1. Special presumptions take the place of general ones;[o] 2. Presumptions derived from the ordinary course of nature are stronger than casual presumptions;[p] 3. Presumptions are favored which tend to give validity to acts;[q] 4. The presumption of innocence is favored in law.[r]

Conclusive presumptions are estoppels;[s] solemn admissions of parties; and unsolemn admissions which have been acted on.[t] So, also, that an officer's return is correct as to facts stated therein as between the parties;[u] that an infant under the age of seven years is incapable of committing a felony;[v] that a boy under fourteen is incapable of committing a rape;[w] that the issue of a wife with whom her husband cohabits is legitimate, though her infidelity be proved;[x] that all persons subject to any law which has been duly promulgated, or which derives its validity from general or immemorial custom, are acquainted with its provisions.[y]

Rebuttable presumptions are presumptions that a man is innocent of the commission of a crime;[z] that the possessor of property is its owner;[a] that possession of fruits of crime is guilty possession;[b] that things usually done in the course of trade have been done;[c] that solemn instruments are duly executed;[d] that a person, relation, or state of things once shown to exist continues to exist, as life,[e] a partnership,[f] insanity;[g] that official acts have been properly performed.[h]

PRESUMPTIONS OF LAW are rules which, in certain cases, either forbid or dispense with any ulterior inquiry,[i] inferences or positions established, for the most part, by the common, but occasionally by the statute law, which are obligatory alike on judges and juries.[j] They are adopted from motives of public policy, and are those which arise in certain cases by force of the rules of law, directing an inference to be drawn from proof of the existence of a particular fact or facts. They are conclusive or inconclusive.

Conclusive presumptions are those which admit of no averment or proof to the contrary. Thus, the records of a court, except in some proceedings to amend them, are conclusive evidence of the matter there recorded, being presumed to be rightly made up.

Inconclusive or disputable presumptions of law are those where a fact is presumed to exist, either from the general experience of mankind, or from policy, or from proof of the existence of certain other facts, until something is offered to show the contrary. Thus, the law presumes a man to be sane until the contrary appears, and to be innocent of the commission of a crime until he is proved to be guilty. So, the existence of a person, or of a particular state of things, being shown, the law presumes the person or state of things to continue until something is offered to conflict with that presumption.[k]

PRIMA FACIE EVIDENCE is that which appears to be sufficient proof respecting the matter in question, until something appears to controvert it; but which may be contradicted or controlled. Prima facie evidence of fact is, in law, sufficient to establish the fact unless rebutted.[l] For example, when buildings are fired by sparks emitted from a locomotive engine passing along the road, it is prima facie evidence of negligence on the part of those who have the charge of it.[m]

The holder of a bill of exchange, or note indorsed in blank, is prima facie the owner.

PRIMARY EVIDENCE is the best evidence, or that proof which most certainly exhibits the true state of facts to which it relates.

The non-production of the best evidence, when it can be had, creates a presumption that, if produced, it might operate against the party who declines to produce it.[l]

The rule excludes only that evidence which itself indicates the existence of more original source of information.

The law requires this, and rejects secondary or inferior evidence when it is attempted to be substituted for evidence of a higher or superior nature; for example, when a written contract has been entered into, and the object is to prove what it was, it is requisite to produce the original writing if it is to be attained; and, in that case, no copy or other inferior evidence will be received. This is a rule of policy grounded on a reasonable suspicion that the substitution of inferior for better evidence arises from sinister motives; and an apprehension that the best evidence, if produced, would alter the case to the prejudice of the party. This rule relates, not to the measure and quantity of evidence, but to its quality when compared with some other evidence of superior degree.

Oral evidence cannot be substituted for:

1. Any instrument which the law requires to be in writing; such as records, public documents, official examinations, deeds of conveyance of lands, wills, other than nuncupative, promises to pay the debt of another, and other writings mentioned in the statute of frauds.

2. Any contract which the parties have put in writing. Here the written instrument may be regarded, in some measure, as the ultimate fact to be proved. Thus, where in a suit for the price of labor performed, it appears that the work was commenced under an agreement in writing, the agreement must be produced.

3. Any writing, the existence of which is disputed, and which is material either to the issue between the parties, or to the credit of witnesses, and is not merely a memorandum of some other fact.

The fact that in such cases the writing is in the possession of the adverse party does not change its character; it is still the primary evidence of the contract; and its absence must be accounted for by notice to the other party to produce it, before secondary evidence of its contents can be received.[k]

Exceptions. The contents of any record of a judicial court, and of entries in any other public books or registers, may be proved by an examined copy. This exception extends to all records and entries of a public nature, in books required by law to be kept, and is admitted, because of the inconvenience to the public which the removal of such documents might occasion, especially if they were wanted in two places at the same time; and also, because of the public character of the facts which they contain, and the consequent facility of detection of any fraud or error in the copy.[l]

For the same reasons, and for the strong presumption arising from the undisturbed exercise of a public office, that the appointment is valid, it is not in general necessary to prove the written appointments of officers. All who have acted as such are presumed to have been duly appointed to the office, until the contrary appears.[m]

Where the evidence is the result of voluminous facts, or the inspection of many books and papers, the examination of which could not conveniently take place in court, a witness who has inspected the accounts of parties, may testify to the general balance without producing the accounts;[n] so, also, inscriptions on walls and fixed tables, mural monuments, gravestones, surveyors' marks on boundary trees, etc.[n]

The verbal admission of the contents of a writing, by the party himself, if against his interest, will supersede the necessity of proving it.[o]

As it refers to the quality rather than the quantity of evidence, it is evident that the fullest proof that every case admits of is not requisite; if, therefore, there are several eye-witnesses to a fact, it may be sufficiently proved by one only.

It is not always requisite when the matter to be proved has been reduced to writing, that the writing should be produced; as, if the narrative of a fact to be proved has been committed to writing, it may be proved by parol evidence. A receipt for the payment of money, for example, will not exclude parol evidence of payment.[o]

Where a document is not itself evidence at common law, and a copy of it is made evidence by statute, the copy alone is evidence, and not the original.[p]

PROOF OF ISSUE.

CONFINING THE EVIDENCE TO THE POINT IN ISSUE. It is a general rule, both in civil and criminal cases, that the evidence must be confined to the point in issue. Justice and convenience require the observance of this rule, particularly in criminal cases; for, when a prisoner is charged with an offence, it is of the utmost importance to him that the facts laid before the court or jury should consist exclusively of the transaction which forms the subject of the complaint, information, or indictment against him, and which alone he has come prepared to answer.[q] To this general rule there are several exceptions, and a variety of cases which do not fall within the rule. In general, evidence of collateral facts is not admissible;

[l] 4 Blackf. 241; 2 Id. 228. [j] 1 Greenl Ev. §§ 82, 85-88 [k] "I have always," said Lord Tenterden, "acted almost strictly on the rule, that what is in writing shall only be proved by the writing itself. My experience taught me the extreme danger of relying on the recollection of witnesses, however honest, as to the contents of written instruments; they may be so easily mistaken, that I think the purposes of justice require the strict enforcement of the rule." Id B & B. 287. [l] 1 Greenl Ev. § 91 [m] 1 Greenl Ev. § 92; Id § 83; 1 Show 307; Holt, 284; 1 Salk 281; Carth 220; East. 192; B N. but where such a fact is material to the issue joined between the parties it may be given in evidence; as, for example, in order to prove that the acceptor of a bill knew the payee to be a fictitious person, or that the drawer has general authority from him to fill up bills with the name of a fictitious payee, evidence may be given to show that he had accepted similar bills before they could, from their date, have arrived from the place of date.[f]

When special damage sustained by the plaintiff is not stated in the plaintiff's complaint, it is not one of the points in issue, and, therefore, evidence of it cannot be received; yet a damage which is a necessary result from the defendant's breach of contract may be proved, notwithstanding it is not alleged in such complaint.[g]

In general, evidence of the character of either party is inadmissible; yet in some cases such evidence may be given.[h]

When evidence incidentally applies to another person or thing not included in the transaction in question, and with regard to whom or which it is inadmissible, yet if it bear upon the point in issue it will be received.[i]

PROVING THE AFFIRMATIVE OF THE ISSUE. The affirmative of the issue must be proved. The general rule with regard to the burden of proving the issue requires that the party who asserts the affirmative should prove it; but this rule ceases to operate the moment the presumption of the law is thrown in the other scale. When the issue is on the legitimacy of a child, therefore, it is incumbent on the party asserting the illegitimacy to prove it.[j]

See BURDEN OF PROOF, above.

PROVING THE SUBSTANCE OF THE ISSUE JOINED. The substance of the issue joined between the parties must be proved.[k]

—— IN CIVIL ACTIONS. 1. It is a fatal variance in a contract if it appear that a plaintiff who ought to have been joined has been omitted.[l] But it is no variance to omit a person who might have been joined as defendant; because the non-joinder may be remedied by amendment. 2. The consideration of the contract must be proved; but it is not necessary for the plaintiff to set out in his complaint, or prove on the trial, the several parts of a contract consisting of distinct and collateral provisions; it is sufficient to state so much of the contract as contains the entire consideration of the act, and the entire act be done in virtue of such consideration, including the time, manner, and other circumstances of its performance.[m]

It is a general rule of evidence, that if the substance of the issue, or the material facts contested by the pleadings, be established, it is sufficient.

—— IN CRIMINAL ACTIONS, it may be laid down that it is, in general, sufficient to prove what constitutes an offence. It is enough to prove so much of the charge as shows that the defendant has committed a substantive crime therein specified.[n]

PRIVILEGED COMMUNICATIONS. No person is liable, either civilly or criminally, in respect to anything published by him as a member of a legislative body, in the course of his legislative duty. Nor in respect to anything published by him in the course of a judicial proceeding. This privilege extends not only to parties, counsel, witnesses, jurors, and judges in a judicial proceeding, but also to proceedings in legislative bodies, and to all who, in the discharge of public duty or the honest pursuit of private right, are compelled to take part in the administration of justice or in legislation. A fair report of any judicial proceeding or inquiry is also privileged.[o]

PROBABILITY. There is always a strong probability that a man of good moral character, and who has heretofore been upright and truthful, will, when examined as a witness, under oath, tell the truth; and, on the contrary, that a man who has been guilty of perjury will not, under the same circumstances, tell the truth; the former is, therefore, entitled to credit, the latter is not.

PROVING THE ISSUE. See BURDEN OF PROOF; ISSUE, above.

PUBLIC DOCUMENTS. Public documents purporting to be edited or printed by authority of Congress, or the State legislature, or either house thereof, are evidence to the same extent that authenticated copies of the same would be.

QUESTIONS are either general or leading. General questions are those which require the witness to state what he knows, without any suggestion being made to him; as, "Who gave the blow?" A leading question is one which leads the mind of the witness to the answer, or suggests it to him; as, "Did A. give the blow?" or "Is not your name A.?"

REBUTTING. It is a general rule that anything may be given as rebutting evidence which is a direct reply to that produced on the other side,[p] and the proof of circumstances may be offered to rebut the most positive testimony.[q] But there are several rules which exclude all rebutting evidence. A party cannot impeach his own witness, though he may disprove, by other witnesses, matters to which he has testified; nor can he rebut or contradict what a witness has sworn to which was immaterial to the issue.[r] Parties and powers are estopped from contradicting a written instrument by parol proof; but this rule does not apply to strangers.[s] But the parties may prove that before breach the agreement was abandoned, or annulled, by a subsequent agreement not in writing.[t] And when the writing was made by another, as where the logbook stated a desertion, the party affected by it may prove that the entry was false or made by mistake.[u]

RECORDS—COPIES OF RECORDS, Etc.

Judicial and Public Records and Transcripts.

A foreign judgment is the judgment of a foreign tribunal. The various States of the United States are in this respect considered as foreign to each other.

Such judgments may be evidenced by exemplifications under the great seal of the State or country where the judgment is recorded, or under the seal of the court where the judgment remains[v] by a copy proved to be a true copy, or by the certificate of an officer authorized by law, which certificate must itself be properly authenticated.[w] The acts of foreign tribunals which are recognized by the law of nations, such as courts of admiralty and the like, are sufficiently authenticated by copies under seal of the tribunal,[x] in the absence of a statute to the contrary.

The records and judicial proceedings of the courts of any State shall be proved or admitted in any other court within the United States, by the attestation of the clerk, and the seal of the court annexed, if there be a seal, together with a certificate of the judge, chief-justice, or presiding magistrate, as the case may be, that said attestation is in due form; and the said records and judicial proceedings, authenticated as aforesaid, shall have such faith and credit given to them in every court within the United States, as they have by law or usage in the courts of the State from whence the said records are or shall be taken.[y]

All records and exemplifications of office books, which are or may be kept in any public office of any State, not appertaining to a court, shall be proved or admitted in any court, or office in any other State, by the attestation of the keeper of the said records or books, and the seal of his office thereto annexed, if there be a seal, together with the certificate of the presiding justice of the court of the county or district, as the case may be, in which such office is or may be kept, or of the governor, the secretary of state, the chancellor, or the keeper of the great seal of the State, that the said attestation is in due form, and by the proper officer; and the said certificate, if given by the presiding justice of the court, must be further authenticated by the clerk or prothonotary of the said court, who shall certify, under his hand and the seal of his office, that the said presiding justice is duly commissioned and qualified; or if the said certificate is given by the governor, the secretary of state, the chancellor, or keeper of the great seal, it shall be under the great seal of the State in which said certificate is made; and the said records and exemplifications, authenticated as aforesaid, shall have such faith and credit given to them in every court and office within the United States as they have by law or usage in the courts or offices of the State from whence the same are or shall be taken.[z]

The provisions of both acts extend to the records, etc., of the Territories.

If the court, whose record is certified, has no seal, this fact should appear, either in the certificate of the clerk or in that of the judge.[a]

Re-examination. See Witnesses, below.

REFRESHING MEMORY. A witness has a right to examine a memorandum or paper which he made in relation to certain facts when the same occurred, in order to refresh his memory; but the paper or memorandum itself is not evidence.[b]

REGISTERS. Although not originally intended for the purposes of evidence, public registers are in general admissible to prove the facts to which they relate. Of these are registers of births, deaths and marriages, etc.

REPUTATION. In general, reputation is evidence to prove a person's character in society; a pedigree.[c] Certain prescriptive or customary rights and obligations; and matters of public notoriety. But as such evidence is in its own nature very weak, it must be supported, when it relates to a right or privilege, by proof of acts of enjoyment of such right or privilege within the period of living memory.[d] Afterwards, evidence of reputation may be given. The fact must be of a public nature; it must be derived from persons likely to know the facts.[e] The facts must be general, and not particular; they must be free from suspicion.[f]

RUMOR. In general, rumor cannot be received in evidence; but when the question is whether such rumor existed, and not its truth or falsehood, then evidence of it may be given.

SECONDARY EVIDENCE is that species of proof which is admissible when the primary evidence cannot be produced, and which becomes by that event the best evidence.[g] But before such evidence can be allowed it must be clearly made to appear that the superior evidence is not to be had. The person who has it must be applied to, whether he be a stranger or the opposite party; in case of a stranger, a subpœna and attachment, when proper, must be taken out and served; in the case of a party, notice to produce such primary evidence must be proved before the secondary evidence will be admitted.[h] After proof of due execution of the original, the contents should be proved by a counterpart, if there be one, for this is the next best evidence; and it seems that no evidence of a mere copy is admissible until proof has been given that a counterpart cannot be produced.[i] If there be no counterpart, a copy may be proved in evidence by any witness who knows that it is a copy, from having compared it with the original.[j] But there are no degrees of secondary evidence; and when a party has laid the foundation for such evidence he may prove the contents of a deed by parol, although it appear that an attested copy is in existence.[k] See DECLARATIONS; LOST PAPERS, above.

SUGGESTIONS. See LEADING QUESTIONS; QUESTIONS, above.

TELEGRAMS. Telegraphic communications must be proved in the same manner as other writings, such as letters and contracts are—that is, by the original. If that is lost, it may be proved by copy, or, in default of that being obtainable, by oral testimony.[l] Sometimes the person to whom it is addressed is in the office when it is received; in such case, if it is not reduced to writing, it can only be proved, like other matters resting in parol, by the recollection of the witnesses in whose hearing it was repeated.[m]

TESTS are those things by which to ascertain the truth respecting other things.[n] A paper may be submitted to a jury as a test or standard by which to determine the genuineness of other writings.[o] They are only admissible when no collateral issue can be raised concerning them.[p]

THREATS. When a confession is obtained from a person accused of crime, in consequence of a threat, evidence of such a confession cannot be received, because, being obtained by torture or fear, it comes in so questionable a shape that no credit ought to be given to it.[q] This is the general principle, but what amounts to a threat is not so easily defined. It is proper to observe, however, that the threat must be made by a person having authority over the prisoner, or by another in the presence of such authorized person and not dissented from by the latter.[r]

BY TRANSLATIONS. Whenever any written evidence in a cause is in a language other than the English, a written translation of it in the English language, made by a competent translator, and verified by his affidavit, may be read in evidence instead of the original, if such original be competent evidence.

TRUTH. See AFFIRMATION; OATH, above.

VIVA VOCE. It is said a witness delivers his evidence viva voce (with living voice) when he does so in open court; the term is opposed to deposition; it is sometimes opposed to ballot; as, the people vote by a written or printed ballot, but their representatives in legislature vote viva voce.

VOIRE DIRE is a preliminary examination of a witness to ascertain whether he is competent; as, where he has an interest in the cause of action, for he might be tempted to perjure himself if he testified when interested.

WEIGHT OF EVIDENCE. In civil causes the preponderance or weight of evidence determines the case in favor of the party possessing it. In criminal causes, proof beyond a reasonable doubt is required; a preponderance of evidence may fall far short of proof, and proof may be of a much lower degree than proof beyond such a doubt, which should be required to warrant the conviction of the accused.

When a verdict has been rendered against the weight of evidence the court may, on this ground, grant a new trial; but the court will exercise this power not merely with a cautious but a strict and sure judgment, before they send the case to a second jury. The general rule, under such circumstances, is, that the verdict, once found, shall stand; and setting aside is the exception. A new trial will be granted on this ground to either party; the evidence, however, is not to be weighed in golden scales.[s]

WITNESSES.

TESTIMONY is the statement made by a witness under oath or affirmation.

A WITNESS is one who testifies to what he knows. One who testifies, under oath, to something which he knows at first hand.[t] A disinterested witness is one who has no interest in the cause or matter in issue. An ear witness is one who attests to things which he heard himself. An eye witness is one who saw the act or fact to which he testifies.

The principal rules relating to witnesses are the same in civil and in criminal cases, and the same in all courts.[u]

The testimony of witnesses is taken in three modes:

1. By affidavits.
2. By deposition.
3. By oral examination.

COMPETENCY OF WITNESSES. All persons, of whatever nation, may be witnesses.[v] But in saying this we must, of course, except such as are excluded by the very definition of the term, and such as cannot qualify himself by taking an oath.[w] Therefore all who cannot understand the nature and obligation of an oath, or whose religious belief is so defective as to nullify and render it nugatory, or who are otherwise disqualified by statute, or otherwise are excluded.

Atheists. Such as are insensible to the obligation of an oath, from defect of religious sentiment or belief, are incompetent. Atheists, and persons disbelieving in any system of divine rewards and punishment, are of this class. It is reckoned sufficient qualification, in this particular, if one believe in a God, that he will reward and punish us according to our deserts. It is enough to believe that such punishment visits us in this world only.[u] It would seem to be sufficient to believe in such punishment as for perjury only, if, indeed, it be supposable that a man might believe thus much without extending his faith to any general system of rewards and punishments.[v] The oath may be administered in any form whatever, and with any ceremonies whatever, that will bind the conscience of the witness.[w]

Grand jurors, and persons present before a grand jury,[x] are not permitted to testify to the proceedings had before that body.[y]

Husband and wife are excluded from giving testimony for or against each other when either is a party to the suit or interested.

This rule is founded partly on their identity of interest, and partly, perhaps chiefly, on the policy of the law which aims to protect the confidence between man and wife that is essential to the ties of the marriage relation, and, through that, the good order of society. Whether or not the disability may be removed by consent of the other is a matter of dispute.[z] Some exceptions to this rule[a] are admitted out of necessity for the protection of husband and wife against each other, and for the sake of public justice.[b]

Idiots, lunatics, intoxicated persons, and generally those who labor under such privation or imbecility of mind that they cannot understand the nature and obligation of an oath. The competency of such is restored with the recovery or acquisition[c] of this power. And so a lunatic in a lucid interval may testify.[d] Persons deaf and dumb from their birth are presumed to come within this principle of exclusion until the contrary be shown.[e] A person in a state of intoxication cannot be admitted as a witness.[f]

Infants so young as to be unable to appreciate the nature and binding quality of an oath are incompetent. A child under the age of fourteen is presumed to be incapable until capacity be shown. But the law fixes no limit of age which will of itself exclude; a child five years old has been admitted to testify.[g] A person over fourteen years of age is presumed competent to testify.[h]

Interpreters. A person employed between an attorney and client, to act as an interpreter, is considered merely as an organ between them, and is not bound to testify as to what he has acquired in those confidential communications.[i]

Judges are not allowed to testify to what was made known to them, or took place before them in the hearing of causes.[j]

Persons in possession of secrets of state, or matters the disclosure of which would be prejudicial to the public interest, are not allowed to testify thereto.[k]

Parties to the record are not competent witnesses for themselves or their co-suitors. Nor are they compellable to testify for the adverse party, but they are competent to do so; although one of several co-suitors cannot thus become a witness for the adversary without the consent of his associates. Regard is had not merely to the nominal party to the record, but also to the real party in interest; the former will not be allowed to testify for the adverse side without the consent of the latter.[l]

By the statutes of many States all parties in interest may, subject to some restrictions, testify in their own or any other person's behalf in any action or proceeding.

A party to a suit who is made a witness by statute is to become such under the same requisitions and restrictions as any other witness. He must be of sane mind, of sound memory, of suitable age, willing to be sworn, and capable of taking an oath.[m] The law which renders the parties to a suit competent and compellable to give evidence has not altered the rule of law which requires the execution of attested instruments to be proved by the subscribing witness.[n]

When a party to the action is made a witness by his adversary, he is entitled to be paid witness-fees, as a condition to creating it his duty to attend and be sworn as one who is not a party to the action.[o]

The party who calls his adversary as a witness thereby represents him as worthy of credit, and cannot afterward impeach him by showing that either his general character for truth is bad, or that he has made previous contradictory statements.[p] But he may prove a fact to be otherwise than his adversary has testified,[q] and he may do this by proving admissions of such adversary.[r] And the testimony of a party may be controverted or impeached in the same manner as any other witness.[v]

Defendants cannot testify for themselves unless allowed by statute. But where a material witness for the defendant is indicted jointly with the defendant, and no evidence is given against him, he will be acquitted at once, and may be a witness for the other defendant.[w]

EXAMINATION OF WITNESSES. An oral examination is an examination in the presence of the jury or tribunal which is to decide the fact, or act upon it; the testimony being heard by the jury or tribunal from the lips of the witness.

Examinations of witnesses are had viva voce, by questions and answers.

On motion, in civil and criminal cases, witnesses will generally be excluded from the court room while others are undergoing examination in the same case; this, however, is not a matter of right, but within the discretion of the court.[x]

Witnesses are required to testify from their own knowledge and recollection, yet they are permitted to refresh their memory by reference, while on the stand, to papers written at or very near the time of the transaction in question—even though they were not written by themselves, and though the writing in itself would be inadmissible in evidence.[y]

Being once in attendance, a witness may, in general, be compelled to answer all questions which may legally be put to him.[z] Yet there are exceptions to this rule. He is not compellable where the answer would have a tendency to expose him to a penal liability, or any kind of punishment, or to a criminal charge.[a] But the court decides as to the tendency of the answer, and will instruct the witness as to his privilege.[b] The question whether an answer would have this tendency is to be determined by the oath of the witness.[c] And, in point of fact, out of the necessity of the case, it is a matter which the witness may be said practically to decide for himself. The witness may answer if he chooses; and if he do answer after having been advised of his privileges, he must answer in full; and his answer may be used in evidence against him for all purposes.[d] Whether a witness be compellable to answer to his own degradation or infamy is questionable; but a witness cannot refuse to testify simply because his answer would tend to disgrace him; it must be seen to have that effect certainly and directly.[e] He cannot refuse to give testimony which is material and relevant to the issue, for the reason that it would disgrace him;[f] but he may refuse where the question (being put on cross-examination) is not relevant and material, and does not in any way affect the credit of the witness.[g] Whether a witness, when a question is put on the cross-examination which is not relevant and material to the issue, yet goes to affect his credit, will be protected in refusing to answer simply on the ground that his answer would have a direct and certain effect to disgrace him, is a matter not clearly agreed upon. There is good reason to hold that a witness should be compelled to answer in such a case.[h] But the whole matter is one that is largely subject to the discretion of the courts.[i] And there seems no doubt that a witness is in no case competent to allege his own turpitude, or give evidence which involves his own infamy or impeaches his most solemn acts, if he be otherwise qualified to testify.[j]

Cross-examination. After a witness has been examined in chief, the other party has a right to cross-examine him.[k]

One of the principal objects of the cross-examination of a witness is to ascertain the full extent of his knowledge as to the facts to which he testifies. It is certainly one of the most efficacious tests which the law has devised for the discovery of the truth; and greater latitude is allowed in the manner of putting questions, and a witness may be so led as to bring him directly on the point as to the answer; but not to go to the length of putting into the witness' mouth the very words which he is to answer,[l] or echo back again. Leading questions, however, are allowed upon cross-examination. Nor are the rules against questions not relevant and material to the issue always enforced upon cross-examination—a stage of the trial at which great latitude in the form and subject-matter of questions is generally allowed, in order that juries may be fully apprised of "the situation of the witness with respect to the subject of litigation, his interest, his motives, his inclination, and prejudices, his means of obtaining correct and certain knowledge of the facts to which he bears testimony, the manner in which he has used those means, his powers of discernment, memory, and description."[m] Yet witnesses cannot be cross-examined as to collateral and irrelevant matters for the purpose of contradicting them by other evidence.[n] Their testimony as to such matters is always conclusive against the party questioning. "If, by an unfortunate or unskilful question put on cross-examination, a fact be extracted which need not have been evidence upon an examination in chief, then it becomes evidence against the party so cross-examining.[o] The cross-examination of a witness is a matter depending much upon the discretion of the court, which will sometimes permit one to cross-examine his own witness when he appears to be in the interest of the adverse party.[p]

A cross-examination as to matters not admissible in evidence entitles the party producing the witness to re-examine him as to those matters.[q]

Inquiry may be made in regard to collateral facts in the discretion of the judge,[r] but not merely for the purpose of contradicting the witness by other evidence.[s] Irrelevant questions cannot be allowed; but if answered, cannot be contradicted.[t]

A witness who has not been sworn cannot be cross-examined;[u] but if sworn, he may be cross-examined, though no question has been asked him in chief.[v]

Direct examination. The course of examination is, first, a direct examination by the party producing the witness; then, if desired, a cross-examination by the adverse party, and a re-examination by the party producing.[w] As to the direct examination the general rule is, that leading questions[x] (i. e., such as suggest the answer expected or desired) cannot be put to a witness by the party producing him;[y] but in an examination in chief leading questions may be put to direct the witness' attention to the subject of inquiry;[z] or, where he seems to be hostile to the party producing him; or, in the adverse party's interest; or, unwilling to give evidence;[a] or wishes to conceal the truth, or favor the opposite party; or where, from the nature of the case, the mind of the witness cannot be directed to the subject of inquiry without a particular specification of such subject.[b]

Re-examination. The right of re-examination extends to all topics upon which the witness has been cross-examined; but the witness cannot, at this stage, be questioned as to any new facts unconnected with the subject of the cross-examination, and not tending to explain it.[c] But in civil cases the court will allow the plaintiff's counsel, after he has closed his case, to recall a witness to prove a point omitted in the first instance.[d]

If a witness' character has been attacked in cross-examination, the plaintiff may prove a general good character.[e] See CHARACTER, above.

The mode of determining the credibility of witnesses is the same in civil and criminal cases.[f]

Impeachment of Witnesses. Impeachment is an allegation, supported by proof, that a witness who has been examined is unworthy of credit. Every witness is liable to be impeached as to his character for truth; and if his general character is good, he is presumed at all times to be ready to support it.[g]

A party cannot impeach the credit of his own witness; but he is sometimes, in cases of hardship, permitted to contradict it by other testimony.[h]

The credit of an adversary's witness may be impeached by cross-examination, or by general evidence affecting his reputation for veracity (but not by evidence of particular facts, which otherwise are irrelevant and immaterial); and by evidence of his having said or done something before which is inconsistent with his evidence at the trial; also, of course, he may be contradicted by other testimony.[i] Generally, where proof is to be offered that a witness has said or done something inconsistent with his evidence, a foundation must first be laid, and an opportunity for explanation offered, by asking the witness himself whether he has not said or done what it is proposed to prove, specifying particulars of time, place, and person.[j] These rules apply to depositions, unless the inconsistent statements were made after the depositions were taken.[k]

A witness assailed on a point of general bad character is sometimes sustained by a cross-examination of witnesses to character, to show their improper motives, or the unsatisfactory grounds of their alleged knowledge; or he may be sustained by the testimony of witnesses who will swear that his general character is good.[l]

A witness assailed by proof of former inconsistent statements may be corroborated by proof of other statements, consistent with his testimony in court;[m] whether the statement thus used in corroboration was on oath or not is not material.[n]

Evidence of general good character may be offered to support a witness, whenever his credit is impeached, either by general evidence affecting his character, or on cross-examination.[o] See title CHARACTER.

WRITINGS.

Private writings, as deeds, contracts, wills, etc., are generally admissible in evidence.

There is no difference in evidence between sealed and unsealed writings; and every writing not sealed has the same force and effect that it would have if sealed.

Proof of handwriting is made by the testimony of a witness who saw the paper or signature actually written, or one who has by sufficient means acquired such a knowledge of the general character of the handwriting of the party as will enable him to swear to his belief that the handwriting of the person is the handwriting in question.[o]

An instrument in writing must be proved by at least one subscribing witness.[p] If there be none, by competent proof that the signature of the person whose name is undersigned is genuine.[q] A knowledge of a party's handwriting may be derived from a fixed correspondence between the parties, and by letters,[r] and where the witness has directed letters to the parties and received answers,[s] and by a clerk employed to inspect franks.[t] The opinions of persons accustomed to the examination of handwriting, of the genuineness of a signature, by comparing it with papers in the party's handwriting, already filed in the case, may be permitted.[u] Proof of the death of the attesting witness;[v] or his insanity;[w] his residence beyond the jurisdiction of the court; that his name is unknown; or that he cannot be found after diligent inquiry; in all these cases the execution of the instrument may be proved by other evidence.[x]

If the adverse party, pending the cause, agrees to admit the execution, other proof is not necessary.[y]

FRAUD is the unlawful appropriation of another's property with knowledge, by design, and without criminal intent. Fraud is sometimes used as a term synonymous with "covin," "collusion," and deceit, but improperly so. "Covin" is a secret contrivance between two or more persons to defraud and prejudice another of his rights. "Collusion" is an agreement between two or more persons to defraud another under the forms of law, or to accomplish an illegal purpose. Deceit is a fraudulent contrivance by words or acts to deceive a third person, who, relying thereupon, without carelessness or neglect of his own, sustains damage thereby.[a] Actual or positive fraud includes cases of the intentional and successful employment of any cunning, deception, or artifice used to circumvent, cheat, or deceive another.[b] For instance, the misrepresentation by word or deed of material facts, by which one exercising reasonable discretion and confidence is misled to his injury, whether the misrepresentation was known to be false, or only not known to be true, or even made altogether innocently; the suppression of material facts which one party is legally or equitably bound to disclose to another; all cases of unconscientious advantage in bargains obtained by imposition, circumvention, surprise, and undue influence over persons in general, and especially over those who are by reason of age, infirmity, idiocy, lunacy, drunkenness, or other incapacity unable to take due care of and protect their own rights and interests; bargains of such an unconscionable nature and of such gross inequality as naturally lead to the presumption of fraud, imposition or undue influence, when the decree of the court can place the parties in statu quo; cases of surprise and sudden action without due deliberation of which one party takes advantage; fraudulent awards, with intent to do injustice; fraudulent prevention of acts to be done for the benefit of others under false statements or false promises; frauds in relation to trusts of a secret or special nature; frauds in verdicts, judgments, decrees, and other judicial proceedings, and frauds upon creditors and other persons standing upon a like equity, are cases of actual fraud.[c] Legal or constructive fraud includes such contracts or acts as, though not originating in any actual design or contrivance to perpetrate a fraud, yet by their tendency to deceive or mislead others, or to violate private or public confidence, are prohibited by law. Thus, for instance, contracts against some general public policy or fixed artificial policy of the law; cases arising from some peculiar confidential or fiduciary relation between the parties where advantage is taken of that relation by the person in whom the trust or confidence is reposed, or by third persons; agreements and other acts of parties which operate virtually to delay, defraud, and deceive creditors; purchases of property, with full notice of the legal or equitable title of other persons to the same property (the purchaser becoming by construction particeps criminis with the fraudulent grantor).[d]

To constitute fraud: 1. It must be such an appropriation as is not permitted by law. 2. It must be with knowledge that the property is another's, and with a design to deprive him of it. 3. It is not itself a crime, for want of a criminal intent, though it may become such in cases provided by law.[e]

Fraud, in its ordinary application to contracts, includes any trick or artifice employed by one person to induce another to fall into or detain him in an error; so that he may take an agreement contrary to his interest; and it may consist in misrepresenting or concealing material facts, and may be effected by words or by actions. While, on the one hand, courts have aimed to repress the practice of fraud; on the other, they require that before relieving a party from a contract on the ground of fraud, that it should be made to appear that on entering into such a contract he exercised a due degree of caution.[f] A misrepresentation as to a fact, the truth or falsehood of which the other party has an opportunity of ascertaining, or the concealment of a matter which a person of ordinary sense, vigilance, or skill might discover, does not in law constitute fraud. Misrepresentation as to the legal effect of an agreement does not avoid it as against a party whom such misrepresentation has induced to enter into it, every man being presumed to know the legal effect of an instrument which he signs, or of an act which he performs. An intention to violate, entertained at the time of entering into a contract, but not afterwards carried into effect, does not vitiate the contract.[g] But when one person misrepresents or conceals a material fact which is peculiarly within his own knowledge, or, if it be also within the reach of the other party, is a device to induce him to refrain from inquiry and is shown that the concealment or other deception was practised with respect to the particular transaction, such transaction will be void on the ground of fraud.[h] And even the concealment of a matter which may disable a party from performing the contract is a fraud.[i]

EFFECT OF FRAUD. Fraud when sufficiently proved and ascertained, avoids a contract (specialty or transaction), ab initio, whether the fraud be intended to operate against one of the contracting parties, or against third parties, or against the public,[j] and this though the fraud does not appear on its face.[k] 1. The fraud must be material to the contract or transaction which is to be avoided on account of it; for if it relate to another matter, or to this only in a trivial and unimportant way, it affords no ground for the action of the court. Thus a misrepresentation by the vendor of a horse, as to the place where he bought it, is not such a material fraud as will avoid the sale of the horse.[l] 2. It must relate distinctly and directly to this contract; and it must affect its very essence and substance.[m] 3. The fraud must work an actual injury. If it be only an intended fraud, which is never carried into effect, or if all be done that was intended, but the expected consequences do not result from it, the law cannot recognize it.[n] And if there be a fraud, and it be actually injurious, the injured party can recover only the damage directly attributable to the fraud,[o] and not an increase of this damage caused by his own indiscretion or mistake in relation to it;[p] and if no damage be caused by the fraud, no action lies.[q] 4. And it must appear that the injured party not only did in fact rely upon the fraudulent statement,[r] but had a right to rely upon it in full belief of its truth; for otherwise it was his own fault or folly, and he cannot ask the law to relieve him from the consequences.[s] Where a party is obliged to rely upon the statements of another, and not only may but should repose peculiar confidence in him, this is in the nature of a special trust, and the law is very jealous of a betrayal of this trust and visits it with great severity. So all transactions with feeble persons, whether they are so from age, sickness, or infirmity of mind, are carefully watched.[t] On the other hand, if the statement be false in fact, and injurious because false, if it were believed to be true by the party making it, it is not a fraud on his part.[u] If the statement be in fact false, and be uttered for a fraudulent purpose, which is in fact accomplished, it has the whole effect of fraud in annulling the contract, although the person uttering the statement did not know it to be false, but believed it to be true.[v] If the falsehood be known to the party making the statement, malice or self-interest will be inferred.[w]

The fraud of an agent, by a misrepresentation which is embodied in the contract to which his agency relates, avoids the contract. But the party committing the fraud cannot in any case himself avoid the contract on the ground of fraud.[x]

In general, concealment is not in law so great an offence as misrepresentation. Concealment to be actionable must of course be of such facts as the party is bound to communicate.[y] A false representation, in order to have the full effect of fraud, must relate to a substantial matter of fact, and not merely to a matter which rests in opinion, or estimate or judgment.[z] Men differ in opinion; and if any one relies on mere opinion, instead of ascertaining facts, it is his own folly.

Misrepresentation need not be made by the party whom it benefits, in order to constitute a fraud against him. And it is for this reason that if A. trust B. upon the fraudulent recommendation of C., A. is not left to his action for damages against C. for the deceit, but the fraud of C. invalidates the contract between A. and B., and gives A. the same right to retake the goods as if the fraud had proceeded directly from B. himself.[a] It may be his by adoption.[b] A principal may commit a fraud by an agent; or may even be affected by the fraud of his agent, although personally honest.[c]

Material misrepresentations, which go to the substance of a contract, avoid that contract, whether they are caused by mistake, and occur wholly without fault, or are designed and fraudulent.[d] This principle is carried so far, that if one acquires property by a purchase founded upon his misrepresentations, especially if they are not only false but fraudulent, he acquires no right in the property, but the seller may retake it in the same manner as if it had been stolen; that is, with all reasonable necessary force.[e] The obtaining goods under false pretences, under color of purchasing them, or otherwise, does not change the property.[f] Where a sale is fraudulently procured by the vendee, he may be sued by the vendor, before the expiration of the credit agreed on to be given.[g]

A fraudulent party cannot himself assert his fraud, and claim as his right any advantages resulting from it; for no man can be permitted to found any rights upon his own wrong;[h] and if both parties are in fault the law will not interfere between them: and this is so, if both parties be actually fraudulent, although the beginning, and the greater fraud, may be on one side or the other.[i]

The fraud may be proved by parol evidence, or any circumstances, however contrary to apparent facts or statements in the written instrument.[j] This rule does not contravene the general one against the admissibility of parol testimony against written, as the effect and result of such evidence is, that the instrument never had any operation; and on grounds of policy and necessity this rule may be supported.[k] The mode of proving fraud must depend upon the facts of each particular case.

Fraud gives no action in any case without damage,[l] and in matters of contract it is merely a defence; it cannot in any case constitute a new contract.[m] It is essentially ad hominem[n] (to the interests or passions of the party).

STATUTE OF FRAUDS. No action shall be brought in any of the following cases, (unless made in writing and signed by the party to be charged thereby, or by some person thereunto by him legally authorized):

1. To charge an executor or administrator, upon any special promise, to answer damages out of his own estate; or,

2. To charge any person, upon any special promise, to answer for the debt, default, or miscarriage of another; or, ment or promise, made in consideration of marriage; or,

4. Upon any contract for the sale of lands, or,

5. Upon any agreement that is not to be performed within one year from the making thereof, unless the promise, contract or agreement, upon which such action shall be brought, or some memorandum or note thereof, shall be in writing, and signed by the party to be charged therewith, or by some person thereunto by him lawfully authorized; excepting, however, leases not exceeding the term of three years.[o]

The consideration of any such promise, contract, or agreement, need not set forth in such writing, but may be proved.[p]

No action shall be maintained, to charge any person by reason of any representation made concerning the character, conduct, credit, ability, trade, or dealings of any other person, unless such representation be made in writing, and signed by the party to be charged thereby, or by some person thereunto by him legally authorized.[q]

It is obvious that the general purpose of the above section is to permit no party to bind himself except by a written promise signed by him; because this will secure an exact statement and the best evidence of the terms and conditions of the promise.[r]

What is a sufficient signing.—A substantial signing of the agreement is sufficient, although it is not literal and formal.[s] Hence if the agreement be not itself signed, but a letter alluding to and acknowledging the agreement is signed, this is sufficient.[t] It is not, however, enough that the agreement be written by the party himself, unless he also signs it.[u] If, however, he writes his name in any part of the agreement, it may be taken as his signature;[v] but not otherwise.[w] Where one is in the habit of using instruments with his name printed in them, this will be his signature.[x] And so if he writes it in pencil.[y] The agreement need not be signed by both parties, but only by him who is to be charged by it;[z] and he is estopped from denying the execution of the instrument on the ground that it wants the signature of the other party. The signature may be made by an agent,[a] but the agency must be an agency for this purpose.[b] The agent may be authorized by parol.[c]

The agreement must contain all that belongs essentially to the agreement,[d] and more than this is not needed; nor can parol evidence be received to supply anything which is wanting in the writing, to make it the written agreement on which the parties rely.[e] The form of the agreement must be adequately expressive of the intent and obligation of the parties. It may be upon one or many pieces of paper; provided that the several pieces are so connected by mutual reference or otherwise that there can be no uncertainty as to the meaning and effect of them all, when taken together and viewed as a whole;[f] but this connection of several parts cannot be established by extrinsic evidence.[g] The written agreement must be certain.[h] If the contract be in its nature entire, and in one part it satisfies the statute, and in others it does not, then it is altogether void.[i] But if these parts are severable, then it may be good in part and void in part.[j]

"To answer for the debt, default, or miscarriage of another person." This clause covers all guarantees, and is of great importance in reference to them. Its general effect is to make it necessary that all collateral promises should be in writing; and only when the promise is distinctly collateral is it within this clause of the statute. In the absence of evidence showing distinctly that a promise is collateral, it will be treated as an original promise.[k] Nor is it then material whether the promise is made before or after the delivery of the goods.[l]

There must be some one who owes the debt directly. There must exist an original liability, as the foundation for the collateral liability, and one of these liabilities must be entirely distinct from the other. If, therefore, the creditor trusted to one of the parties more than to the other, but did in fact trust to one together with the other, it is not within the statute. The party for whom the promise has been made must be liable to whom it is made; and it is equally necessary that he continue liable after making the promise; that is, the promise of the party undertaking must not have the effect, prior to its performance, of discharging the party originally liable. In order to bring a promise within this clause of the statute, it must be made to a party to whom the person undertaken for is liable. The statute applies only to promises made to the persons to whom another is already, or is to become answerable; it must be a promise to be answerable for a debt of, or a default in some duty by that other person towards the promisee. A promise, therefore, by A. to B. to pay a debt due from B. to C. is not within the statute.[m]

Whenever the main purpose and object of the promisor is not to answer for another, but to subserve some purpose of his own, his promise is not within the statute.[n] If one of several persons, who are liable jointly or severally for the payment of the same debt, promises the creditor to pay the debt, this is not a case within the statute; for although the performance of the promise will have the effect of discharging the others, it is to be presumed that the thing in contemplation of the promisor was his own discharge.[o] This clause of the statute does not embrace cases in which the liability to pay the debt of another arises by operation of law, out of some transaction between the parties, without the aid of any special promise. Thus, if A., who is indebted to B., sends money to C. to pay the debt, and C. accepts the trust, he thereby becomes liable to B. for the debt of A.[p] The words "debt, default, or miscarriage," extend to a liability for a mere tort.[q]

"No action shall be brought upon any contract for the sale of lands, tenements, or hereditaments, or any interest in or concerning them, unless," etc. These words are very general, and intended to have a wide operation; but they have been somewhat controlled by construction. Thus, if the question be whether a contract for the sale of growing crops be a contract or sale of "any interest concerning lands," it seems to be answered in conformity with the intention of the parties. If grain be reaped and stacked, or stored in barns, it becomes a chattel. If it be growing when sold, yet if the sale contemplates its severance when grown, and delivery of it then, distinct from the land, it is in the contemplation of the parties a mere chattel, and is therefore so in the view of the law, so far as this statute is concerned.[r] So, growing grass, growing trees, or fruits. A promise to pay for improvements on land is only a promise to pay for work and labor, or materials, and not for an interest in lands, and therefore need not be in writing.[s] And a contract for the sale of removable fixtures is not within the statute.[t] A mere license to use land, as to stack hay or grain upon it for a time, is not an interest in lands within the statute.[u] But any contract, of which the effect is to give one party an easement on the land of another, is within the statute.[v]

"No action shall be maintained upon any agreement that is not to be performed within the space of one year from the making thereof, unless," etc. An executory promise capable of entire performance within one year is not within this clause of the statute. The decision of this question does not seem to depend entirely upon the understanding or intention of the parties. They may contemplate as probable a much longer continuance of the contract, or a suspension of it, and a revival after a longer period; it may itself be liable to such continuance and revival; and it may in this way be protracted so far that it is not in fact performed within a year; but if, when made, it was in reality capable of a full and bona fide performance within a year, without the intervention of extraordinary circumstances, then it is to be considered as not within the statute. There are three classes of cases arising under this clause of the statute: 1. Where by the express agreement of the parties the performance of the contract is not to be completed within one year. These cases are clearly within the statute.[w] 2. Where it is evident from the subject-matter of the contract that the parties had in contemplation a longer period than one year as the time for its performance. These cases are within the statute.[x] 3. Where the time for the performance of the contract is made to depend upon some contingency, which may or may not happen within one year. These cases do not come within the statute.[y]

GIFTS. See CONVEYANCES, "Wills;" SALES.

A GIFT is a voluntary conveyance; that is, a conveyance that is not founded on the consideration of money or blood; a transfer of the title to property to one who receives it without paying for it.[a] The act by which the owner of a thing voluntarily transfers the title and possession of the same from himself to another person without any consideration. Gifts inter vivos are gifts made from one or more persons, without any prospect of immediate death, to one or more others. Gifts causa mortis are gifts made in prospect of death.

BETWEEN LIVING PERSONS.

This is a contract which takes place by the mutual consent of the giver, who divests himself of the thing given in order to transmit the title of it to the donee gratuitously, and the donee, who accepts and acquires the legal title to it. This gift takes place when the giver is not in any immediate apprehension of death, which distinguishes it from a gift mortis causa.[b] Gifts inter vivos have no reference to the future, and go into immediate and absolute effect. Delivery is essential; without actual possession the title does not pass. A mere intention or naked promise to give, without some act to pass the property, is not a gift. There exists repentance (the locus pœnitentiæ) so long as the gift is complete and left imperfect in the mode of making it.[c]

The subject of the gift must be certain; and there must be the mutual consent and concurrent will of both parties. Delivery must be according to the nature of the thing. It will have to be an actual delivery, so far as the subject is capable of delivery. If the thing be not capable of actual delivery, there must be some act equivalent to it. The donor must part not only with the possession, but with the dominion. If the thing given be a chose in action, the law requires an assignment or some equivalent instrument, and the transfer must be executed.[d]

When the gift is perfect by delivery and acceptance, it is then irrevocable unless it is prejudicial to creditors, or the donor was under legal incapacity, or was circumvented by fraud. If a man intending to give a jewel to another say to him, "Here, I give you my ring with the ruby in it," etc., and with his own hand delivers it to the party, this will be a good gift notwithstanding the gift bear any other jewel, being delivered by the party himself to the person to whom given.[e] Where a father bought a ticket in a lottery, which he declared he gave to his infant daughter E., and wrote her name upon it, and after the ticket had drawn a prize he declared that he had given the ticket to his child E. and that the prize money was hers: this was held sufficient for a jury to infer all the formality requisite to a valid gift and that the title in the money was complete and vested in E.[f]

IN PROSPECT OF DEATH.

This is a gift made by a person in sickness, who, apprehending his dissolution near, delivers, or causes to be delivered, the possession of any personal goods to keep as his own in case of the donor's decease.[g] It differs from a legacy, inasmuch as it does not require proof in the court of probate.[h] And no assent is required from the executor to perfect the donee's title.[i] It differs from a gift inter vivos, because it is ambulatory and revocable during the donor's life, because it may be made to the wife of the donor, and because it is liable for his debts. To constitute a good gift mortis causa: 1. The thing given must be personal property;[j] a bond,[k] bank notes,[l] and a check offered for payment during the life of the donor will be so considered.[m] Not so a promissory note of the sick man made in his last illness.[n] 2. The gift must be made by the donor in peril of death, and to take effect only in case the giver die.[o] 3. There must be an actual delivery of the subject to or for the donee, in cases where such delivery can be made,[p] but such delivery can be made to a third person for the use of the donee.[q]

A gift causa mortis does not require the executor's assent,[r] is revocable by the donor during his life[s] by recovery[t] or resumption of possession,[u] but not by a subsequent will,[v] but may be satisfied by a subsequent legacy.[w] It may be of any amount of property.[x]

Such gifts are liable for the testator's debts.[y]

IGNORANCE. See ACTS; EVIDENCE; LAW.

IGNORANCE OF FACT is the want of knowledge as to the fact in question. It would be an error resulting from ignorance of fact, if a man believed a certain woman to be unmarried and free, when in fact she was a married woman; but if he were to marry her under that belief he would not be criminally responsible.[a] Ignorance of the laws of a foreign government, or of another State, is ignorance of fact.[b] Ignorance of fact excuses; ignorance of law does not excuse.[c]

IGNORANCE OF LAW is the want of knowledge of those laws which it is our duty to understand, and which every man is presumed to know. Thus, for example, the law forbids any one marrying a woman whose husband is living; if any man, then, imagined he could marry such a woman he would be ignorant of the law; and if he married her he would commit an error as to a matter of law, and in doing this would be presumed to know the law respecting bigamy, and that he knew that he was committing, and that he intended to commit, the offence of bigamy; and this is true in regard to all offences.

Every man may acquire a knowledge of the laws that have been promulgated; and a neglect to become acquainted with them is voluntary ignorance.[d]

INSURANCE. See BAILMENTS.

INSURANCE is a contract whereby, for an agreed premium, one party undertakes to indemnify another against loss on a specified subject by specified perils. The party agreeing to make the indemnity is usually called the insurer or underwriter; the party to receive the indemnity is called the insured or assured; the agreed consideration is called the premium; the written contract is called the policy; the events insured against are termed risks or perils; and the subject, right, or interest to be protected is denominated the insurable interest.[a] Insurance against accidents to travellers is confined to risks in travel, etc. Insurance against fire on land to buildings and all species of property, real or personal, that is subject to destruction or direct damage by fire. Insurance on lives is, in general, upon human life, but is also made upon the lives of domestic animals or such as are in possession of the insured. Insurance on risks in carriage and navigation is upon vessels and other navigable craft, freight, cargo, and liens on either by bottomry, respondentia, mortgage for commissions or otherwise, and on profits. Companies who issue policies of insurance are incorporated, and are either stock companies, mutual companies, or a mixture of the two. In a stock company the members or stockholders pay in a certain capital which is liable for the contracts of the company. In a mutual company the members are themselves the parties insured; in other words, all the members contribute premiums to the fund which is liable to each member for loss, according to the terms of the contract. In the mixed class certain members, who may or may not be insured, contribute a certain amount of the capital, for which they hold certificates or shares, and are entitled to interest on the same at a stipulated rate, or to an agreed share of the surplus receipts, after payment of losses and expenses to be estimated at certain periods.

The business of insurance companies is usually transacted through agencies. The agent for effecting insurance may be such either by appointment, or the recognition of his acts done as such.[b] He may be agent for either of the parties to the policy, or for distinct purposes, or for both.[c] An insurance agency may be more or less extensive according to the express or implied stipulations and understanding between him and his principals. It may be for filling up and issuing policies signed in blank by his principals; for transmitting applications to his principals, filled up by himself as their agent, or that of the applicant; for receiving and transmitting premiums; for adjusting and settling losses; or granting liberties and making new stipulations; or for any one or more of these purposes.[d] Notice to an agent of matters within his commission is notice to the company.[e]

AGREEMENT FOR INSURANCE. An agreement containing specific stipulations is often made in short terms preliminary to the filling out and delivery of an insurance policy. Such an agreement, specifying the rate of the premium, the subject, and risk, and amount to be insured in general terms, and being assented to by the parties, is binding.[f] Though it is usually in writing, it may nevertheless be by parol, or by parol acceptance of a written proposal.[g] It must be in such form or expression that the parties, subject, and risk can be thereby distinctly known, either by being specified or by references so that it can be definitely reduced to writing.[h] Such an agreement must have an express or implied reference to some form of policy. To be valid it must be on a legal interest against legal risks.[i] When the agreement is by a communication between parties at a distance, an offer by either will be binding upon both on a despatch by the other of his acceptance within a reasonable or the prescribed time, and prior to this offer having been countermanded.[j]

See APPLICATIONS, ETC., below.

APPLICATIONS AND REPRESENTATIONS FOR INSURANCE. The preliminary statement made by a party applying for an insurance on life, or against fire, is called the application. It generally consists of written answers to interrogatories proposed by the company applied to respecting the proposed subject. It corresponds to the "representations" preliminary to maritime insurance. It is usually referred to expressly in the policy as being the basis or a part of the contract, and this reference is in effect a warranty of the truth of the statements.[k] An oral misrepresentation of a material fact will defeat a policy on life, or against fire, no less than in maritime insurance, on the ground of fraud.[k] Insurance against fire and on life rests upon the same general conditions of good faith as maritime insurance; but in the first two classes the contract is usually based mainly upon statements by the applicant in his written replies to the numerous inquiries expressly referred to in the policy, which answers are thus made express warranties, and must, accordingly, be strictly true, whether their being so is or is not material to the risk; the inquiries are intended to cover all material circumstances, subject, however, to the principle, applicable to all contracts, that fraud by either party will exonerate the other from his obligations, if he so elects.[l]

See MISREPRESENTATION, below.

INSURANCE POLICIES. A policy of insurance is the contract or instrument whereby insurance is made by the insurer or underwriter in favor of the person insured, expressed, implied, or intended, against some risk, peril or contingency in reference to some subject. It is usually against accident or fire, on a life, or marine. An interest policy is one when the party insured has a real substantial assignable interest in the thing insured. An open policy is one on which the value is to be proved by the party insured.[m] Also, one in which an aggregate amount is expressed in the body of the policy, and the specific amounts and subjects are to be indorsed from time to time.[n] A valued policy is one where a value has been set on the goods or ship insured, and the value inserted in the policy in the nature of liquidated damages. In such a policy the value of the subject is expressly agreed, or is, as between the parties, the amount insured. A wager policy is a pretended insurance founded on an ideal risk, when the insured has no interest in the thing insured, and can, therefore, sustain no loss by the happening of any of the misfortunes insured against. Such policies are strongly reprobated.[o]

Every policy, whether accident, fire, life, or marine, specifies or imports parties, and specifies the subject or interest intended to be insured, the premium on the consideration, and the amount insured, the risks or perils for which indemnity is stipulated, and the period of the risk, or the terminus from whence and where to.

Blanks. If a blank is left in a policy of insurance for the name of the place of destination of a ship, it will avoid the policy.[p]

A date is necessary to the validity of a policy of insurance; but where there are separate underwriters, each sets down the date of his own signing, as this constitutes a separate contract.[q]

The duration of the risk under a marine insurance, or one on inland navigation, is either from one geographical terminus to another, or for a specified time; that of an accident or life policy is either for days, weeks, months, a term of years, or for life; that of a fire policy is for a specified time.

It is a leading principle as to the construction of a policy of insurance, that its distinguishing character as a contract is to be favored by the law.[r] Records and documents expressly referred to in the policy are, in effect, for the purpose of reference, a part of the policy or contract of insurance.[s]

A policy may take effect on actual or constructive delivery, and may be retrospective where neither party knows the prior circumstances.[t]

In marine insurance the contract has necessarily more implied reference to customs and usages than most other contracts; or, in other words, the larger proportion of the stipulations are not specifically expressed in the instrument.[u] Thence it has been thought to be an imperfect, obscure and confused instrument.[v] But the difficulty in giving a practical construction seems to arise more from the complication of the circumstances necessarily involved, than from any remediable defects in its provisions or phraseology. New provisions are needed from time to time to adapt the contract to new circumstances.

A mistake in filling up a policy may be corrected by order of a court of equity or of equity jurisdiction or powers.[w]

Policies of insurance are liberally construed.[x]

ABANDONMENT is a term used only in reference to risks in navigation; but the principle is applicable to fire insurance where there are remnants, and sometimes, also, under stipulations in life policies in favor of creditors.[y] The object of abandonment being to recover the whole value of the subject of the insurance it is requisite only where the subject itself, or the remains of it, or claims on account of it, survive the peril which is the occasion of the loss.[z]

In such case the assured must elect, immediately upon receiving intelligence of a loss, whether to abandon to the company—he cannot delay for the purpose of speculating on the state of the markets.[a] The right to abandon is waived by commencing full repairs, but not by temporary repairs;[b] but is not lost by reason of the enhancement of the loss through the mere negligence or mistakes of the master of the vessel, or of the crew, but it is too late to abandon after the arrival in specie at the port of destination. An inexpedient or unnecessary sale of the subject by the master does not strengthen the right.[c]

Abandonment may be made upon information entitled to credit, but if made speculatively, upon conjecture, it is void; and it must be made without delay after reasonable reliable information of loss is received; otherwise the right will be waived, the assured not being permitted to wait in order to speculate upon the state of the markets.[d] In the absence of any stipulation on the subject no particular form of abandonment is required; it may be in writing or oral; in express terms or by obvious implication; but it must be absolute and unconditional and the ground for it must be stated.[e] Acceptance may cure a defect in abandonment, but is not necessary to its validity.[f] Nor is the underwriter obliged to accept or decline; he may, however, waive it.[g] But it is not subject to be defeated by subsequent events.[h] And the subject must be transferred free of incumbrance except expense for salvage.[i]

See SALVAGE; TOTAL LOSS, below.

Acceptance of abandonment in insurance is in effect an acknowledgment of its sufficiency, and perfects the right of the assured to recover for a total loss if the cause of loss and circumstances have been truly made known. No particular form of acceptance is necessary, and the underwriter is not obliged to say whether he accepts.[j] An acceptance may be a constructive one, as, by taking possession of an abandoned ship to repair it without authority to do so,[k] or by retaining such possession an unreasonable time, under a stipulation authorizing the underwriter to take such possession.[l]

ADJUSTMENT (determining the amount of loss).[x] There is no specific form essentially requisite to an adjustment. To render it binding, it must be intended and understood by the parties to a policy to be absolute and final. It may be made by indorsement on the policy, or by payment of the loss, or the acceptance of an abandonment.[m] If there is fraud by either party to an adjustment it does not bind the other.[n] If one party is led into a material mistake of fact by fault of the other, the adjustment will not bind him.[o] The amount of the loss is governed by that of the insurable interest, so far as it is covered by the insurance.

AMOUNT COVERED—AMOUNT OF LOSS.

THE AMOUNT COVERED or insured is limited by that specified in the policy to be insured, and this limit may be applied to an identical subject only, as a ship, a building, a life, etc.; or to successive subjects, as successive cargoes on the same ship, or successive parcels of goods transmitted on a certain canal or railroad during a specified period; and it may be also limited by the terms of the contract to a certain proportion, as a quarter, half, etc., of the value of the subject or interest on which the insurance is made.[p]

THE AMOUNT OF LOSS is the diminution, destruction, or defeat of the value of, or of the charge upon the insured subject by the direct consequence of the risk insured against, according to the value of the policy or the contribution for loss, so far as the value is covered by the insurance.[q]

DEVIATIONS, or variations from risks described in the policy from a necessity which is not inexcusably incurred, does not forfeit the insurance;[r] as to seek an intermediate port for repairs necessary for the prosecution of the voyage;[s] changing the course to avoid disaster;[t] delay in order to succor those distressed at sea;[x] damage merely in defence against hostile attacks.[u]

Change of risk in insurance against fire, so as to render the insured subject, or its surroundings, or the use made of it different from those specified in the application, will discharge the underwriters.[v] A change of risk under a life policy, in contravention of its express provisions, will defeat it in like manner.[w] Though such a policy does not appear to have any implied condition other than those relative to fraud common to all contracts.

The effect of a deviation in all kinds of insurance is to discharge the underwriters or insurers, whether the risk is thereby enhanced or not; and the doctrine applies to lake and river navigation as well as that of the ocean.[y]

INSURABLE INTEREST. It is essential to the contract of insurance, as distinguished from a wager, that the assured should have a legally recognizable interest in the insured subject, the pecuniary value of which may be appreciated and computed and valued. It is not requisite that the insured party should have an absolute property in the insured subject, or that the subject or interest should be one that can be exclusively possessed, or be transferable in trade or assignment. The subject or interest must, however, be such that it may be destroyed, lost, damaged, diminished, or intercepted by the risks insured against. The interests usually insured are those of the owner in any species of property, of mortgagor, mortgagee, holder of bottomry or respondentia bond, of an agent, consignee, lessee, factor, carrier, bailee, or party having a lien, or entitled to a rent or income, or being liable to a loss depending upon certain contingencies, or having a certainty or probability of a profit or pecuniary benefit depending on the insured subject.[y] The certainty or probability, direct or incidental, of pecuniary benefit by the living, or pecuniary loss or damage to any one by the decease of another, gives an insurable interest in his life.[z]

The amount of insurable interest is the value of the insured subject as agreed by the policy, or its market value, or the pecuniary loss to which the assured is liable by the risks insured against, though the insured subject—for example, life or health—has not a market value.[a]

LOSS is the destruction of or damage to the insured subject by the perils insured against according to the express provisions and construction of the contract of insurance. These accidents, or misfortunes, or perils, as they are sually denominated, are all distinctly enumerated in the policy; and no loss, however great or unforeseen, can be a loss within the policy unless it be the direct and immediate consequence of one or more of these perils.[b] Loss under a life policy is simply the death of the subject by a cause, the risk of which is not expressly excepted in the policy, and when the loss is not fraudulent, as when one insured, who insures the life of another for his own benefit, procures the death. Loss in insurance against fire must, under the usual form of the policy, be the partial or total destruction or damage of the thing insured against fire. In maritime insurance, in which loss by fire is one of the risks usually included, the loss insured against may be absolutely or constructively told, or a partial or general average loss, or a particular average.

Partial losses are sometimes called average losses, because they are often in the nature of those losses which are the subject of average contributions; they are distinguished into general and particular averages. Total losses in maritime insurance are absolutely such when the entire thing perishes or becomes of no value. Constructively, a loss may become total where the value remaining is of such a small amount that the whole may be surrendered. See ADJUSTMENT, above.

MEASURE OF DAMAGES. In cases of loss of goods which have been insured from maritime dangers when the adjustment is made, the damages are settled by valuing the property, not according to prime cost, but at the price at which it may be sold at the time of selling the average.[c] See ADJUSTMENT, above.

MEMORANDUM. A clause in a policy limiting the liability of the insurer is called a memorandum. Policies of insurance on risks of transportation by water generally contain exceptions of all liability from loss on certain articles other than total, or for contributions for general average, and for liability for particular average on certain other articles supposed to be perishable, or specially liable to damage under specified rates, or each varying from three to twenty per cent., and for any loss, whatever, under three or five per cent. Some seventy or eighty articles are subject to these exceptions of particular average in the divers forms of policy in use in different localities.[d] These exceptions were formerly introduced under a "MEMORANDUM," or "N. B.," and hence have been called "memorandum articles," and the body of exception the "memorandum." The list of articles and rates of exceptions vary much in different places, and from time to time at the same place.[e]

PART OWNERS. See INSURABLE INTEREST, above.

POLICY. See INTRODUCTION, above.

PREMIUM is the consideration for a contract of insurance. A policy of insurance always expresses the consideration, called the premium, which is a certain amount, or a certain rate upon the value of the risk, paid wholly in cash, or partly so and partly by promissory note (called a premium note, and collaterally secured by a stipulation in the policy for its being forfeited by its non-payment) or otherwise.[f] By the charters of mutual fire insurance companies the insured building is usually subject to a lien from the premium.[g] The premium may be payable by service rendered.[h] In life insurance the premium is usually payable periodically,[i] and the continuance of the risk is usually made to depend upon the due payment of a periodical premium.[j] So far as the agreed risk is not given in amount or time under a marine policy, the whole, or a proportional, stipulated, or customary part of the premium is either not payable, or, if paid, is to be returned unless otherwise agreed.[k]

RISKS AND PERILS. The risk or peril in an accident policy is the injury or death; in a life policy, is death; under a fire policy, destruction or damage by fire; under a marine policy, by perils of the seas, usually including fire; and under a policy upon subjects at risk in lake, river or canal navigation, by perils of the same.

Under a marine insurance the risks are from a certain place to a certain other, or from one date to another. The perils usually insured against as "perils of the seas" are: fire, lightning, winds, waves, rocks, shoals, and collisions; and also the perils of hostile capture, piracy, theft, arrest, barratry (seizing and running away with the vessel, negligence, mutiny, etc.), and jettisons (casting the goods away, from necessity, whereby they sink and are lost).[l] But a distinction is made between the extraordinary action of perils of the seas, from which insurers or underwriters are liable, and wear and tear, and deterioration by decay, for which they are not liable.[m] Perils of lakes, rivers, etc., are analogous to those of the seas.[n]

Insurers or underwriters are not liable for loss occasioned by the gross misconduct of the assured, or imputable to him; but if a vessel is seaworthy, with suitable officers and crew, underwriters are liable for loss, though occasioned through the mistakes or want of assiduity and vigilance of the officers or men.[o] Underwriters are not answerable for loss directly attributable to the qualifications of the insured subject independently of the specified risks,[p] or for loss distinctly occasioned by the fraudulent or gross negligence of the party insured.

Insurance against illegal risks, such as trading with the enemy, the slave trade, piratical cruisers, and illegal kinds of business, is void.[q]

Policies usually contain express exceptions of some risks besides those impliedly excepted. These may be in maritime insurance, contraband and illicit interloping trade, violation of blockade, mobs and civil commotions; in fire policies, loss on jewelry, paintings, sculpture, by hazardous trade, etc.; in life policies, loss by suicide, risks in certain climates or localities, and in certain hazardous employments, without express permission.[r] See AVERAGE; LOSS, above.

SALVAGE. See MARITIME LAW.

TOTAL LOSS in marine insurance is either the absolute destruction of the insured subject by the direct action of the perils insured against, or a constructive—sometimes called technical—total loss, in which the party insured is deprived of the possession of the subject, still subsisting in specie, or where there may be remnants of it, or claims subsisting on account of it, and the assured by the express terms or legal construction of the policy has the right to recover its value from the underwriters, so far as, and at the rate of which it is insured, on abandonment and assignment of the still-subsisting subject, or remnants or claims arising out of it.[s]

A constructive total loss may be by capture; seizure by unlawful violence, as piracy,[t] or damage to ship or goods over half the value at the time and place of loss,[u] or a loss of the voyage;[v] though the ship or goods may survive in specie, but so as not to be fit for use in the same character for the same service or purpose;[w] or by jettison;[x] or by necessity to sell on account of the action and effect of the peril insured against;[y] or by loss of insured freight consequent on the loss of cargo or ship.[z] There may be a claim for a total loss in addition to a partial loss.[a] A total loss of the ship is not necessarily such of cargo,[b] nor is submersion necessarily a total loss;[c] nor is temporary delay of the voyage.[d]

A constructive total loss, and an abandonment thereupon of the ship, is a constructive total loss of freight; and a constructive total loss and abandonment of cargo has a like effect as to commissions or profits thereon; and the validity of the abandonment will depend upon the actual facts at the time of the abandonment, as the same may subsequently prove to have been.[e]

VALUATION. See ESTIMATED VALUE, above.

WARRANTY in insurance is a stipulation or agreement on the part of the insured party, in the nature of a condition. It is express when the stipulation is introduced into the written contract by agreement of the parties. It is implied when it naturally results from the nature of the contract; as, that the ship shall be seaworthy when she sails on the voyage insured.

An express warranty must be strictly complied with, and the assured is not permitted to allege, in excuse for non-compliance, that the risk was not thereby affected, since the parties have agreed that the stipulated fact or act shall be the basis of the contract,[f] unless compliance is rendered illegal by a subsequent statute.[g]

The most frequent express warranties in maritime policies are, the time of sailing, and, in time of hostilities, the national character of the insured subject and neutral insignia and conduct. In fire and life policies warranties are quite numerous, comprehending all the facts stated by the applicant in his application when incorporated, as it usually is, into the policy, and expressly contracted by reference thereto. In fire insurance express reference is often made to the charter of the company; specially so in mutual companies, and, in such companies, to rules and regulations, and conditions indorsed upon the policy.[z] A policy of insurance, no less than any other contract, is subject to the condition of fraud.

Intention. See CONTRACTS; CRIMINAL LAW.
Inter Partes. See CONVEYANCES.

INTEREST. See CONTRACTS.

INTEREST is the compensation which is paid by the borrower of money to the lender for its use, and, generally, by a debtor to his creditor in recompense for his detention of the debt. It is a payment for the use of money.

ALLOWANCE OF INTEREST. The contractor who has expressly or impliedly undertaken to pay interest is, of course, bound to do so. Executors,[a] administrators,[b] assignees of bankrupts or insolvents,[c] guardians,[d] and trustees[e] who have kept money an unreasonable length of time,[f] and have made, or might have made, it productive,[g] are chargeable with interest.

The lender upon an express or implied contract for interest is entitled to receive and enforce its payment. Executors, administrators, etc., are, in some cases, allowed interest for advances made by them on account of the estates under their charge.[h] The rule has been extended to trustees,[i] and compound interest even allowed them.[j]

EXPRESS CONTRACTS. When the debtor expressly undertakes to pay interest, he or his personal representatives having assets are bound to pay it. But if a party has accepted the principal, it has been determined that he cannot recover interest in a separate action.[k]

IMPLIED CONTRACTS where, from the course of dealings between the parties, a promise to pay is implied, the debtor is bound to pay.[l] So, also, on an account stated, or other liquidated sum, whenever the debtor knows precisely what he is to pay, and when he is to pay it[m] on an unsettled claim, after a demand of payment.[n] But interest is not due for unliquidated damages, or on a running account, where the items are all on one side, unless otherwise agreed upon;[o] on the arrears of an annuity secured by a specialty,[p] or given in lieu of dower;[q] on bills and notes, if payable at a future day certain, after due;[r] if payable on demand, after demand made.[s] Where the terms of a promissory note are that it shall be payable by instalments, and on the failure of any instalment, the whole is to become due; interest on the whole becomes payable from the first default.[t] Where, by the terms of a bond or a promissory note, interest is to be paid annually, and the principal at a distant day, the interest may be recovered before the principal is due. On a deposit by a purchaser, which he is entitled to recover back, paid either to a principal or an auctioneer. For goods sold and delivered after the customary or stipulated term of credit has expired;[w] if there be no credit, then from the time of sale.[x] On judgment debts,[y] from the rendition of judgment.[z] On judgment affirmed in a higher court.[a] On money obtained by fraud, or where it has been wrongfully detained.[b] For whoever receives money not his own, and detains it from the owner unlawfully, must pay interest therefor. Hence, a public officer, retaining money wrongfully, is chargeable with interest during the time of such wrongful detainer.[c] So, an agent, unreasonably neglecting to inform his principal of receipt of money, is liable for the interest from the time when he should have communicated such information.[d] But an agent is not generally liable for interest on funds in his hands, unless he uses them, or is in default in accounting for them.[e] On money paid by mistake, or recovered on a void execution.[f] On money lent or laid out for another's use.[g] On money had and received after demand.[h] On purchase money which has lain dead, where the vendor cannot make a title.[i] On purchase-money remaining in the purchaser's hands to pay off incumbrances.[j] Rent from the time that it is due.[k] Even if the rent is payable otherwise than in money, but is not so paid.[l] Interest cannot, however, be recovered for arrears of rent payable in wheat.[m]

When the rate of interest is specified in any contract, that rate continues until full payment is made.

JUDGMENTS. Upon a note made payable in a certain number of years, with interest annually, judgment can be recovered only for simple interest on the principal sum.[n]

TIME DUE—DATE OF ALLOWANCE, ETC. In actions for money had and received, interest is allowed from the date of the service of the writ.[o] On debts payable on demand, interest is payable only from the demand.[p] The words "with interest for the same" carry interest from date.[q] The mere circumstances of war existing between two nations is not a sufficient reason for abating interest on debts due by the subjects of one belligerent to another.[r] But a prohibition of all intercourse with an enemy during war furnishes a sound reason for the abatement of interest until the return of peace.[s]

A debt barred by the statute of limitations, and revived by an acknowledgment, bears interest for the whole time.[t]

COMPOUND INTEREST. Interest upon interest is not allowed, except in special cases,[u] and the uniform current of decisions is against it, as being a hard, oppressive exaction, and tending to usury.[v] If an agreement is made to convert interest already due into principal, or if accounts between parties are settled by rests, and therefore in effect upon the principal of compound interest, which may be done by an express accounting,[w] or under a custom of forwarding accounts, quarterly, half-yearly, or yearly, to the debtor who acquiesces in them by his silence;[x] these transactions are valid, and sanctioned by the law: and such a method of computation is even directed by courts.[y] If compound interest has accrued, even under a prior bargain for it, and being actually paid, it cannot be recovered back.[z] But compound interest cannot be recovered as such, even if it be expressly promised.[a] But annual rests in merchants' accounts are allowed,[b] though not after mutual dealings have ceased.[c] In cases where it is expressly stipulated that interest shall be payable at certain fixed times, it has been held that interest may be charged upon the interest from the time it is payable.[d]

Where a partner has overdrawn the partnership funds, and refuses, when called upon to account, to disclose the profits, recourse would be had to compound interest as a substitute for the profits he might reasonably be supposed to have made.[e] And when executors, administrators, or trustees convert the trust money to their own use, or employ it in business or trade, or fail to invest, they are chargeable with compound interest.[f]

In an action to recover the annual interest due on a promissory note, interest will be allowed on each year's interest until paid.[g]

An infant's contract to pay interest on interest will be binding upon him when it is for his benefit.[h]

COMPUTING INTEREST. In casting interest on notes, bonds, etc., upon which partial payments have been made, every payment is to be first applied to keep down the interest; but the interest is never allowed to form a part of the principal so as to carry interest.[i] When a partial payment exceeds the amount of interest due when it is made, it is correct to compute the interest to the time of the first payment, cast interest on the remainder to the time of the second payment, add it to the remainder, and subtract the second payment, and in like manner from one payment to another, until the time of judgments.[j] And the same rule applies to judgments.[k]

Where a partial payment is made before the debt is due, it cannot be apportioned part to the debt and part to the interest. As, if there be a bond for one hundred dollars, payable in one year, and at the expiration of six months fifty dollars be paid in, this payment shall not be apportioned part to the principal and part to the interest, but at the end of the year interest shall be charged on the whole sum, and the obligor shall receive credit for the interest of fifty dollars for six months.[l]

FOREIGN INTEREST. The rate of interest of the place of performance is to be allowed where such place is specified,[m] otherwise of the place of making the contract.[n] But the rate of interest of either place may be reserved; and this provision will govern, if an honest transaction, and not a cover for usury.[o]

LIMITATION OF INTEREST. When the money due is tendered to the person entitled to it, and he refuses to receive it, the interest ceases.[p] Where the plaintiff is absent in foreign parts beyond the seas, evidence of that fact may be given in evidence to the jury on the plea of payment, in order to extinguish the interest during such absence.[q]

Whenever the law prohibits the payment of the principal, interest during the prohibition is not demandable.[r]

If the plaintiff has accepted the principal, he cannot recover the interest in a separate action.[s]

TO THE PENALTY OF BOND. It is a general rule that the penalty of a bond limits the amount of the recovery.[t] But in some cases the interest is recoverable beyond the amount of the penalty.[u] The recovery depends on principles of law, and not on the arbitrary discretion of a jury.[v]

The exceptions are: Where the bond is to account for moneys to be received;[w] where the plaintiff is kept out of his money by writs of error,[x] or delayed by injunction;[y] if the recovery of the debt be delayed by the obligor;[z] if extraordinary emoluments are derived from holding the money;[a] or the bond is taken only as a collateral security;[b] or the action be on a judgment recovered on a bond.[c] But these exceptions do not obtain in the administration of the debtor's assets, where his other creditors might be injured by allowing the bond to be rated beyond the penalty.[d]

RISK OR SERVICE. A lender may charge an extra price for the risk he incurs, if that risk is distinct and different from the mere personal risk of the debtor being unable to pay; for nothing of this kind is any justification whatever for more than legal interest. But where repayment of money loaned is made to depend upon the happening of contingent events, there the lender may take, beside interest for the sum loaned, enough more to insure him against the casualty which might destroy his claim; that is, as much more as the risk is worth. So, a lender, whether banker, broker,[e] engaged in trade, or lending his own money,[f] may charge, in addition to the discount, a reasonable compensation for his trouble or services. But the sum paid as such compensation or commission for service and trouble in any case must not exceed the amount usually taken in the course of trade or business; and if it do, such excess will make the contract usurious.[g]

SALES OF NOTES, Etc. Negotiable paper may be sold for less than its face, and the purchaser can recover its whole amount from the maker when it falls due, although he thereby gets much more than legal interest for the use of his money; and this principle extends to bonds and other securities for money loaned. For such paper is property; and one may sell the notes which he holds at a price made low, either by doubts of the solvency of the maker, or by stringency in the money market, as well as his house or his horse at a less than the average price. But the purchase must be actual, and made in good faith, and not merely intended to give efficacy to a usurious contract. For if a person makes his own note, and sells that for what he can get, this, while in appearance the sale of a note, is in fact a loan and a borrowing, and nothing else. If the seller of a note acquired it by purchase, or if it is his for money advanced or lent by him to its full amount, he may sell it for what he can get; but if he be the maker of the note, or the agent of the maker, and receives for the note less than would be paid him if only a lawful discount were made, it is a usurious loan. Where a note has been fairly executed, and where there is no usury between the original parties, so that the payee has acquired a legal right to sue the maker upon the note, he may then dispose of it, at any rate of discount from its face, and the purchaser will have a right to enforce it for its full amount against the maker.[h]

USURIOUS INTEREST. Usury is the taking of more interest than the law allows. The excess over the legal rate charged the borrower for the use of money. There must therefore be the use of money; which may be by a loan, or by the continuance of an existing debt. To one or the other of these classes all contracts for the use of money may be referred.

LANDLORD AND TENANT. See ASSIGNMENTS; BONDS; CONTRACTS; CONVEYANCES, ETC.

LANDLORD AND TENANT is a term used to denote the relation which subsists by virtue of the contract, express or implied, between two or more persons, for the possession or occupation of lands or tenements, either for a definite period, for life, or at will.

A LANDLORD is a person who owns or holds lands and tenements which he leases or rents out to others.

A TENANT is one who has the temporary use and occupation of lands and tenements which belong to another, the duration and other terms of whose occupation are usually defined by an agreement called a lease, while the parties thereto are placed in the relation of landlord and tenant.[a]

A LEASE is a contract for the possession and profits of lands and tenements on the one side, and a recompense of rent or other income on the other.[b] The party who leases is called the lessor; he to whom the lease is made, the lessee; and the compensation or consideration of the lease is the rent.

EXPRESS CONTRACT. When the relation of landlord and tenant is created by an express contract, the instrument made use of for the purpose is called a lease. One of the essential properties of a lease is that its duration must be for a shorter period than the duration of the interest of the lessor in the land; for if he disposes of his entire interest, it becomes an assignment, and this is not a lease. In other words, the granting of a lease always supposes that the grantor reserves to himself a reversion in the leased premises.

See title CONVEYANCES, "Leases," ante.

IMPLIED CONTRACT. The relation of landlord and tenant may arise by necessary implication from the circumstances of the case and the relative position of the parties to each other; for the law will imply its existence whenever there is an ownership of land on the one hand, and an occupation of it by permission on the other; and in all such cases it will be presumed that the occupant intends to compensate the owner for the use of the premises.[c] This relation may be inferred from a variety of circumstances; but the most obvious acknowledgment of its existence is the payment of rent; and this principle applies even after the expiration of an express term of years; for if the tenant continues to hold over after his term has run out, the landlord may, if he chooses, consider him a tenant, and he is, in fact, understood to do so, unless he proceeds to eject him at once. If the landlord suffers him to remain, and receives rent from him, or by any other act acknowledges him as tenant, a new tenancy springs up of so definite a character that it cannot be terminated by either party, except by a reasonable notice to quit.[d] The payment of money, however, is only a prima facie acknowledgment of the existence of a tenancy; for if it does not appear to have been paid as rent, but stands upon some other consideration, it will not be evidence of a subsisting tenancy.[e] Neither does a mere participation in the profits of land, where the owner is not excluded from the possession nor the letting of land upon shares, unless the occupant expressly agrees to pay a certain part of the crop as rent, in either case amount to a tenancy.[f]

But the relation of landlord and tenant will not be inferred from the mere occupation of land, if the relative position of the parties to each other can, under the circumstances of the case, be referred to any other distinct cause: as, for instance, between a vendor and vendee of land, where the purchaser remains in possession after the agreement falls through. the possession in that case was evidently taken with the understanding of both parties that the occupant should be the owner, and not tenant; and the other party cannot, without his consent, convert him into a tenant, so as to charge him with rent.[g] The same principle applies to mortgagor and mortgagee, as well as to that of a mortgagor and the assignee of the mortgagee; for no privity of estate exists in either case; and, as a general rule, a tenancy by implication can never arise under a party who has not the legal estate of the premises in question.[h]

RIGHTS AND LIABILITIES GENERALLY. The rights and obligations of the parties will be considered as having commenced from the date of the lease, if there be one, and no other time for its commencement has been agreed upon; or, if there be no date, then from the delivery of the papers. If, however, there be no writings, it will take effect from the day the tenant entered into possession, and not with reference to any quarter-day.[i] And these rights and duties attach to each of the parties, not only in respect to each other, but also with reference to other persons who are strangers to the contract. The landlord retains certain rights over the property, although he has parted with its possession, while the tenant assumes obligations with respect to it which continue so long as he is invested with that character.

After the making of a lease, the right of possession, in legal contemplation, remains in the landlord until the contract is consummated by the entry of the lessee. When the tenant enters, this right of possession changes, and he draws to himself all the rights incident to possession after this. The landlord's rights in the premises are suspended, or confined to the protection of his reversionary interest; that is, to the maintenance of actions for such injuries as would, in the ordinary course of things, continue to affect his interest after the determination of the lease. Of such are actions for breaking the windows of a house, cutting timber, or damming up a rivulet, whereby the timber on the estate becomes rotten.[j] The injury must be of such a character as permanently affects the inheritance; but it may be so if any one interferes with his tenants, and disturbs their enjoyment so far as to cause him loss of rent or other damage.[k]

The landlord may, however, go upon the premises peaceably for the purpose of ascertaining whether any waste or injury has been committed by the tenant or any other person, first giving notice of his intention. He may also use all ways appurtenant thereto, demand rent, make such repairs as are necessary to prevent waste, or remove an obstruction. But if rent is payable in hay or other produce, to be delivered to him from the farm, he is not entitled to go upon the land and take it, until it is delivered to him by the tenant, or until it has been severed and set apart for his use.[l]

The landlord's responsibilities in respect to possession, also, are suspended as soon as the tenant commences his occupation. If, therefore, a stranger is injured by the ruinous state of the premises, or the tenant creates a nuisance upon them, or if the fences are suffered to fall into decay, whereby the cattle of a stranger stray and are injured or lost, the landlord is in neither case answerable. But it would be otherwise if he had undertaken to keep the premises in repair, and the injury was occasioned by his neglect to keep up the repairs, or if he should renew the lease with a nuisance upon it.[m]

TERMINATION OF THE RELATION. The relation of landlord and tenant may be terminated in several ways. If it is a tenancy for life, it will, of course, terminate upon the decease of him upon whose life the lease depends. If it be for a certain number of years, depending upon some particular event, the happening of that event will determine the tenancy. So if it be for a certain number of years, independent of any contingency, it will expire at the last moment of the anniversary of the day from which the tenant was to hold in the last year of the tenancy. And in all these cases depending upon the express conditions of the lease, no notice to quit will be necessary in order to dissolve the relation of the parties to each other.[n] But a tenancy from year to year, or at will, can only be terminated by a notice to quit: this notice must be in writing; it must be explicit, and require the tenant to remove from the premises; it must run in the name of the person to whom possession is to be given, and not of his agent; and, if given by one of several tenants in common, it is valid only to the extent of his share, but if made by one of several joint tenants, it will inure to the benefit of all.[o] So is a notice by one co-partner of a firm.[p] But notice to quit is not necessary where the relation of landlord and tenant does not subsist,[q] or where the tenant distinctly disclaims the title of the landlord.[r] No particular form of the notice is necessary; but there must be a reasonable certainty in the description of the premises and in the statement of the time when the tenant must quit. If there is more than one tenant, the notice should be addressed to all, but it may be served on either one.[s] A valid notice, properly served, vests the premises in the landlord, and absolutely terminates the tenant's right of possession at the time stated.[t] But this and all other effects of the notice may be waived by the landlord, and is so waived by his receiving subsequent rent from the tenant.[u]

A tenant who is entitled to notice of the determination of his tenancy, must be previously notified of such determination, nor can he be dispossessed by process of law, without that previous notice. Such notice is regulated by statute.[v]

This relation will also be dissolved when a tenant incurs a forfeiture of his lease by a breach of some covenant or condition therein. Another means of dissolving a tenancy is by an operation of law, termed a merger, which happens when a tenant purchases the estate, or it descends to him as heir at law, the lease becoming thereby merged in the inheritance, the lesser estate being absorbed in the greater. In addition to the several methods of putting an end to the tenancy already mentioned, a tenant may surrender his lease to the landlord; or, if the subject matter of the lease wholly perishes, or is required to be taken for public uses, or if the premises are converted into a house of ill-fame, or the tenant disclaims to hold under his landlord and therefore refuses to pay his rent, asserts the title to be in himself, the tenancy is at an end, and the landlord may forthwith resume possession.[w]

After the tenancy has ended, the right of possession reverts to the landlord, who may re-enter upon the premises if he can do so without violence. But if the tenant holds over and the landlord takes possession forcibly so as to endanger a breach of the peace, he is liable to an action for a forcibly entry as well as suffering the consequences of an action for his trespass. The landlord should therefore, in all such cases, resort to the law, and receive possession at the hands of an officer. The tenant is bound quietly to yield up the possession of the entire premises, although he still retains a reasonable right of egress or regress for the purpose of removing his goods and chattels. And for a refusal to perform this duty he will be subjected to all the statutory penalties of holding over.[x]

CROPS—EMBLEMENTS—FIXTURES, Etc. Generally an out-going tenant cannot sell or take away the manure.[y] A tenant whose estate has terminated by an uncertain event which he could neither foresee nor control, is entitled to the annual crop which he sowed while his estate continued, by the law of emblements. He may also, in certain cases, take the emblements or annual profits of the land after his tenancy has ended. And, unless restricted by some stipulation to the contrary, may remove such fixtures as he has erected during his occupation, and convenience, profit, or comfort. For, in general, what a tenant has added he may remove, if he can do so without injury to the premises, unless he has actually built it in so as to make it an integral part of what was there originally.

LANDLORDS. The principal obligation on the part of the landlord, which is, in fact, always to be implied as a necessary condition to his receiving any rent, is, that the tenant shall enjoy the quiet possession of the premises,[a] which means, substantially, that he shall not be turned out of possession of the whole or any material part of the premises by one having a title paramount to that of landlord, or that the landlord shall not himself disturb or render his occupation uncomfortable by the erection of a nuisance on or near the premises, or otherwise oblige him to quit possession.[b] But if he be ousted by a stranger, that is, by one having no title, or after the rent has fallen due, or if the molestation proceeds from acts of a third person, the landlord is in neither case responsible for it.[c] Another obligation which the law imposes on the landlord, in the absence of any express stipulation in the lease, is the payment of all taxes and assessments chargeable upon the property, or any ground-rent or interest upon mortgages to which it may be subject. Every landlord is bound to protect his immediate tenant against all paramount claims. And if a tenant is compelled, in order to protect himself in the enjoyment of the land in respect of which his rent is payable, to make payment which ought, as between himself and his landlord, to have been made by the latter, he may call upon the landlord to reimburse him, or he may deduct such payment from the rent due or to become due.[d] But the landlord is under no obligation to make repairs, or to rebuild in case the premises should be burned; nor does he guarantee that they are reasonably fit for the purposes for which they were taken. And it is not in the power of a tenant to make repairs at the expense of his landlord, unless there be a special agreement between them authorizing him to do so; for the tenant takes the premises for better or for worse, and cannot involve the landlord in expense for repairs without his consent.[e] Even if the premises have become uninhabitable by fire, and the landlord having insured them has recovered the insurance-money, the tenant cannot compel him to expend the money so recovered in rebuilding, unless he has expressly engaged to do so; nor can he, in such an event, protect himself from the payment of rent during the unexpired balance of the term,[f] unless exempted therefrom by statute or the terms of the lease.

The uninhabitableness of a house is not a good defence to an action for rent.[g] And if the landlord expressly covenanted to repair, the tenant cannot quit and discharge himself of the rent because the repairs are not made, unless there is a provision to that effect.[h] And if a landlord is bound by custom or by express agreement to repair, this obligation, and the obligation of the tenant to pay rent, are independent of each other, so that the refusal or neglect of the landlord to repair is no answer to a demand for rent.[i]

TENANT. The tenant, upon taking possession, is at once invested with all the rights incident to the possession; is entitled to the use of all the privileges and easements appurtenant to the tenement, and to take such reasonable estovers and emblements as are attached to the estate. He may maintain an action against any person who disturbs his possession, or trespasses on the premises, though it be the landlord himself.[j] As occupant, he is answerable for any neglect to repair highways, fences, or party walls, it being generally sufficient, except where a statute otherwise provides, to charge a man with such repairs by the name of occupant. He is also liable for all injuries produced by the mismanagement of his servants, or by a nuisance kept upon the premises, or by an obstruction of the highway adjacent to them, or the like; for, as a general rule, where a man is in possession of property, he must so manage it that other persons shall not be injured thereby.[k]

One of the principal obligations which the law imposes upon every tenant, independent of any agreement, is to treat the premises in such a manner that no substantial injury shall be done to them, and so that they may revert to the landlord at the end of the term unimpaired by any wilful or negligent conduct on his part. In the language of the books, he must keep the buildings wind-and-water-tight, and is bound to make fair and tenable repairs, such as the keeping of fences in order, or replacing doors and windows that are broken during his occupation. If it is a furnished house, he must preserve the furniture, and leave it, with the linen, etc., clean, and in good order.[l] But he is not bound to any ornamental repair, as painting, papering, etc., although so broad a covenant on his part as "to leave the premises in good and sufficient repair, order, and condition," might cover these repairs.[m] If he expressly agrees to keep the premises in repair, and to deliver them up in good repair, he is not justified in permitting them to remain out of repair by the fact that they were so when he received them.[n] But the age and character of the premises must be considered in determining the proper extent of the repairs.[o] If the landlord is under no legal obligation to repair, and the tenant voluntarily makes them, the landlord is not bound to repay him for the expense.[p] But there would be a sufficient consideration to sustain a subsequent promise by the landlord. A tenant is not bound to rebuild premises which have accidentally become ruinous during his occupation, nor is he answerable for ordinary wear and tear, nor for an accidental fire, nor to put a new roof on the building, nor to make what are usually called general or substantial repairs; neither is he bound to do painting, whitewashing, or papering, except so far as they may be necessary to preserve exposed timber from decay.[q] With respect to farming leases, a tenant is under a similar obligation to repair, but it differs from the general obligation in this: that it is confined to the dwelling-house which he occupies—the burden of supporting the outbuildings and other erections on the farm being sustained by either the landlord or the tenant, in the absence of any express provision in the lease, by the particular custom of the country in which the farm is situated. He is always bound, however, to cultivate the farm in a good and husbandmanlike manner, to keep the fences in repair, and preserve the timber and ornamental trees in good condition; and for any violation of any of these duties, he is liable to be proceeded against by the landlord, and this whether the act be committed by the tenant or a stranger.[r]

The tenant's general obligation to repair also renders him responsible for any injury a stranger may sustain by reason of his neglect to keep the premises in a safe condition; as, by not keeping the covers of his vaults sufficiently closed, so that a person walking in the street falls through, or is injured thereby. If he repairs or improves the building, he must guard against accident to the passers-by in the street, by erecting a suitable barricade, or stationing a person there to give notice of the danger;[s] for any unreasonable obstruction which he places in the highway adjoining his premises, he may be indicted for causing a public nuisance, or obstructing the highway, as well as rendered liable to an action for damages, at the suit of any individual injured. The law will tolerate such a partial and temporary obstruction of the street as may be necessary for business purposes; as, in receiving and delivering goods from a warehouse, or coals or fuel on the sidewalk, or the like: provided, always, that the public convenience does not suffer from it.[t]

The tenant's chief duty, however, is the payment of rent, the amount of which is either fixed by the terms of the lease, or, in the absence of an express agreement, is such a reasonable compensation for the occupation of the premises as they are fairly worth. If there has been no particular agreement between the parties, the tenant pays rent only from the time he has had the beneficial enjoyment of the premises; but if he has entered into an express agreement to pay rent during the term, no casualty or injury of the premises by fire or otherwise—nothing, in fact, short of an eviction—will save him from such payment,[u] in the absence of a statute or agreement exempting him in such event. But if he has been deprived of the possession of the premises, or any part thereof, by a third person under a title superior to that of the landlord, or if the latter annoys his tenant, erects or causes the erection of such a nuisance upon or near the premises, as renders his occupation so uncomfortable as to justify his removal, he is, in either case, discharged from the payment of rent.[v] But it is no answer to a demand for rent that the premises are not in a fit and proper state and condition for the purposes for which they were hired.[w] If, therefore, the premises are burned down, and the tenant is under no obligation to rebuild (not having agreed to keep in repair), or are destroyed by the act of God or the public enemies, yet he is bound to pay rent thereafter.[x] Unless the lease contains a provision that the rent shall cease or proportionately abate while the premises remain wholly or in part unfit for use.

The obligation to pay rent may be apportioned; for, as rent is incident to the reversion, it will become payable to the assignees of the respective portions thereof, whenever that reversion is severed by an act of the parties, or of the law. But the tenant's consent is necessary for the apportionment when made by the landlord, unless the proportion of rent chargeable upon each portion of the land has been settled by the intervention of a jury.[y] A tenant, however, cannot get rid of or apportion his rent by transferring the whole or a part of his lease; for if he assigns it, or underlets a portion of it, he still remains liable to his landlord for the whole.[y] Instances of an apportionment by act of law occur where there is a descent of the reversion among a number of heirs, or upon a judicial sale of a portion of the premises belonging to them respectively. So, if a man dies, leaving a widow, she will have a right to receive one-third of the rent, while the remaining two-thirds will be payable to his heirs,[z] unless the apportionment be made different by statute.

A tenant cannot dispute his landlord's title. For he is estopped from changing by his own act the character and effect of his tenure.[a] And whenever a tenant disclaims his tenure, or denies his landlord's title, or claims adversely to him, or attorns to another as having title against him, he forfeits his estate. But where the lease was obtained by the fraud of the landlord, the tenant may defend against an action brought on the lease by impeaching the landlord's title.[b] But this fraud must be practised directly against the tenant. A disclaimer by a tenant will work a forfeiture only when it amounts to a renunciation of his character as a tenant, which may be either by setting up a title in another, or claiming title himself.[c]

THIRD PERSONS. The rights and liabilities of landlords and tenants are not confined to the immediate parties to the contract, but attach to all persons to whom the estate may be transferred, or who may succeed to the possession of the premises either as landlords or tenants. This principle follows, as a necessary consequence of that privity of estate which is incident to the relation of landlord and tenant. A landlord may not violate his tenant's rights by a sale of the property; neither can a tenant avoid his responsibilities by substituting another tenant in his stead without the landlord's consent. The purchaser of the property becomes in one case the landlord, and is entitled to all the rights and remedies against the tenant or his assignee which the seller had, while in the other case the assignee of the lessee assumes all the liabilities of the latter, and is entitled to the same protection which he might claim from the assignee of the reversion; but the original lessee is not thereby discharged from his obligations.[d]

LAW is a rule of civil conduct prescribed by the supreme power in a State.[e] A rule or enactment promulgated by the legislative authority of a State; a long established local custom which has the force of such an enactment.[f] The rules and methods by which society compels or restrains the action of its members. The aggregate of those rules and principles of conduct which the governing power in a community recognizes as the rules and principles which it will enforce or sanction, and according to which it will regulate, limit, or protect the conduct of its members.

Arbitrary law is a law, or provision of law, so far removed from consideration of abstract justice that it is necessarily founded on the mere will of the law-making power, so that it is rather a rule established than a principle declared. The principle that an infant shall be bound by his contract is not arbitrary; but the rule that the limit of infancy shall be twenty-one years, not twenty nor twenty-two, is arbitrary. The term is also sometimes used to signify an unreasonable law—one that is in violation of justice. Irrevocable laws are those which have not in their nature or in their language some limit or termination provided, and are, in theory, perpetual: but the perpetuity is liable to be defeated by subsequent abrogation. It has sometimes been attempted to secure an absolute perpetuity by an express provision forbidding any abrogation. But it may well be questioned whether one generation has power to bind its posterity by an irrevocable law.[g] Municipal law is a system of law proper to any single State, nation, or community. Positive law is the system naturally established by a community in distinction from natural law. A prospective law or statute is one which applies only to cases arising after its enactment, and does not affect that which is already past. A retrospective law or statute is one that turns backward to alter that which is past, or to affect men in relation to their conduct before its enactment. These are also called retroactive laws. In general, whenever a retroactive statute would take away vested rights, or impair the obligation of contracts, it is so far void.[h] But laws which only vary the remedies, or merely cure a defect in proceedings otherwise fair, are valid.[i] A penal law is one which inflicts a penalty for its violation. A private or special law is one which relates to private matters which do not concern the public at large. A public or general law is one which affects the public either generally or in some classes.

ADMIRALTY relates to maritime affairs, maritime causes, civil and criminal.

Admiralty jurisdiction is exercised in the first instance by the United States District Courts, from which causes may be removed in certain cases to the United States Circuit Court, and ultimately to the Supreme Court of the United States.

ADMIRALTY JURISDICTION IN CIVIL CASES extends to average[f] bonds of bottomry, respondentia,[g] charter parties,[h] contracts of affreightment between different States or foreign ports,[i] contracts with material men,[j] contracts for conveyance of passengers,[k] maritime contributions,[l] damages occurring at high seas,[l] hypothecation of ship and cargo,[g] jettisons,[l] pilotage,[m] cases of prize or ransom,[n] respondentia,[g] seizures under the laws of impost, navigation, or trade,[o] surveys of ship and cargo,[p] seamen's wages,[q] trespasses occurring at high seas.[r]

ADMIRALTY JURISDICTION IN CRIMINAL CASES extends to all crimes or offences committed on the high seas or beyond the jurisdiction of any country.[s]

CIVIL LAW. The term civil law is generally used to designate the Roman Jurisprudence, Jus civile Romanorum. In its most extensive sense the term Roman law comprises all those legal rules and principles which were in force among the Romans, without reference to the time when they were adopted, but in a more restricted sense we understand by it the law compiled under the auspices of the Emperor Justinian, and which are still in force in many of the states of modern Europe, and to which all refer as authority or written reason.

CODE LAW. A code is a body of law established by legislative authority of the State, and designed to regulate completely, so far as a statute may, the subject to which it relates.

When it is considered how rapidly statutes accumulate as time passes, it is obvious that great convenience will be found in having the statute law in a systematic body, arranged according to subject-matter, instead of having it unorganized—scattered through the volumes in which it was from year to year promulgated. But this transposition suggests amendments for the purpose of harmonizing inconsistencies, supplying defects brought to notice, and also the introduction of a system of all other rules which are recognized as the unwritten or common law of the State. Still, however successfully a code might be supposed to embody all existing and declared law, so as to supersede all previous sources, it cannot be expected to provide prospectively for all the innumerable cases which the diversity of affairs rapidly engenders, and there must soon come a time when it must be studied in a light of numerous explanatory decisions resting in the reported cases upon the same or a similar statute. These discussions have called attention to a subject formerly little considered, but which is of fundamental importance to the successful preparation of a code—the matter of statutory expression. There is no species of composition which demands more care and precision than that of drafting a statute. The writer needs not only to make his language intelligible, but he must make it incapable of misconstruction. When it has passed to a law, it is no longer his intent that is to be considered, but the intent of the words which he has used, and that intent is to be ascertained under the strong pressure of an attempt of the advocate to win whatever possible construction may be most favorable to his cause. The true safeguard is found not in the old method of accumulating synonyms and by an accumulation of particulars, but rather by concise but complete statement of the full principle in the fewest possible words, and the elimination of description and paraphrase by the separate statement of necessary definitions. One of the rules to which the New York revisers generally adhered, and which they found of very great importance, was to confine each section to a single proposition. In this way the intricacy and obscurity of the old statutes were largely avoided.[t]

COMMON LAW. Common law is that system of law, or form of the science of jurisprudence, which has prevailed in England and the United States of America, in contradistinction to other great systems. Those principles, usages, and rules of action applicable to the government and security of persons and of property which do not rest for their authority upon any express or positive declaration of the will of the legislature.[u] The law of any country: to denote that which is common to the whole country in contradistinction to laws and customs of local application.

The most prominent characteristic which marks its contrast with other great systems of the law, and perhaps the source of its distinction, lies in the fact that in the common law neither the stiff rule of long antiquity on the one hand, nor on the other the sudden changes of an arbitrary power are allowed ascendency, but, under the sanction of a constitutional government, each of these is set off against the other; so that the will of the people, as it is gathered both from long established custom and from the expression of the legislative power, gradually forms a system—just, because it is the deliberative will of a free people—stable, because it is the growth of centuries—progressive, because it is amenable to the constant revision of the people.

Perhaps the most important of these narrower senses is that which it has when used in contradistinction to statute law, to designate unwritten as distinguished from written law. It is that law which derives its force and authority from the universal consent and immemorial practice of the people. It has never received the sanction of the legislature by an express act, which is the criterion by which it is distinguished from statute law. When it is spoken of as the lex non scripta, it is meant that it is law not written by authority of law. The statutes are the expression of law in a written form, which form is essential to the statute. The decision of a court which establishes or declares a rule of law may be reduced to writing, and published in the reports; but this report is not the law: it is but evidence of the law; it is but a written account of one application of a legal principle, which principle in the theory of the common law, is still unwritten. However artificial this distinction may appear, it is nevertheless of the utmost importance, and bears continually the most wholesome results. It is only by the legislative power that law can be bound by phraseology and by forms of expression. The common law eludes such bondage; its principles are not limited, nor hampered by the mere forms in which they may have been expressed, and the reported adjudications declaring such principles are but the instances in which they have been applied. The principles themselves are still unwritten, and ready, with all the adaptability of truth, to meet every new and unexpected case; hence, it is said that the rules of the common law are flexible.[v] It naturally results from the inflexible form of the statute or written law, which has no self-contained power of adaptation to cases not foreseen by legislators, that every statute of importance becomes, in course of time, supplemented, explained, enlarged, or limited by a series of adjudications upon it, so that at last it may appear to be merely the foundation of a larger superstructure of unwritten law. It naturally follows, too, from the less definite and precise forms in which the doctrine of the unwritten law stands, and from the proper hesitation of courts to modify recognized doctrines in new exigencies, that the legislative power frequently intervenes to declare, to qualify, or to abrogate the doctrines of the common law. Thus the written and unwritten law, the statutes of the present and traditions of the past, interlace and react upon each other. Historical evidence supports the view which these facts suggest, that many of the doctrines of the common law are but the common law form of antique statutes, long since overgrown and imbedded in judicial decisions.

In this country the common law of England has been adopted as the basis of jurisprudence in all the States except Louisiana. Many of the most valued principles of the common law have been embodied in the constitution of the United States, and the constitutions of the several States; and, in many of the States, the common law and the statutes of England in force in the colony at the time of our independence, are, by the State constitution, declared to be the law of the State until repealed.[w] Hence, where a question in the courts of one State turns upon the law of a sister State, if no proof of such laws is offered, it is, in general, presumed that the common law as it existed at the time of the separation of this country from England prevails in such State.[x] The term "common law," as thus used, may be deemed to include the doctrine of equity.[y] But the term is also used in the amendments to the Constitution of the United States (Art. 7), in contradistinction to equity, in the provision that, "In suits at common law," etc., the "common law" here mentioned is the common law of England, and not of any particular State.[z] The term is used in contradistinction to equity, admiralty, and maritime law.[a] The common law of England is not in all respects to be taken as that of the United States, or of the several States; its general principles are adopted only so far as they are applicable to our situation.[b] In general, too, the statutes of England are not understood to be included, except so far as they have been recognized by colonial legislation, but the course pursued has been rather to re-enact such English statutes as were deemed applicable to our case. By reason of the modifications arising out of our different condition, and those established by American statutes and by the course of American adjudication, the common law of America differs widely in many details from the common law of England; but the fact that this difference has not been introduced by violent changes, but has grown up from the native vigor of the system, identifies the whole as one jurisprudence.

CONFLICT OF LAW is a contrariety or opposition in the laws of States in those cases where, from their relations to each other, or to the subject-matter in dispute, the rights of the parties are liable to be affected by the laws of both jurisdictions. An opposition or inconsistency of domestic laws upon the same subject.

The laws of every State affect and bind directly all property, real or personal, situated within its territory, all contracts made and acts done, and all persons resident within its jurisdiction, and are supreme within its own limits by virtue of its own sovereignty. Ambassadors and other public ministers while in the State to which they are sent, and members of an army marching through, or stationed in a friendly State, are not subject to this rule.[e] Possessing exclusive authority with the above qualification, a State may regulate the manner and circumstances under which property, whether real or personal, in possession or in action, within it, shall be held, transmitted, or transferred, by sale, barter, or bequest, or recovered, or enforced; the condition, capacity, and state of all persons within it; the validity of contracts and other acts done there; the resulting rights and duties growing out of these contracts and acts, and the remedies and modes of administering justice in all cases.[d]

Whatever force and obligation the laws of one country have in another depends upon the laws and municipal regulations of the latter; that is to say, upon its own proper jurisprudence and polity, and upon its own or tacit consent.[e] When a statute or the unwritten law of the country forbids the recognition of the foreign law, the latter is of no force whatever. When both are silent, then the question arises, which of the conflicting laws is to have effect. Generally, force and effect will be given by any State to foreign laws, in cases where, from the transactions of the parties, they are applicable, unless they affect injuriously her own citizens, violate her express enactments, or are contra bona mores (contrary to good morals).

ASSIGNMENTS AND TRANSFERS. Voluntary assignments of personal property, valid where made, will transfer property everywhere,[f] not as against citizens of the state of situs attaching prior to the assignees obtaining possession.[g] An involuntary assignment by operation of law, as, under bankrupt or insolvent laws, will not avail as to attaching creditors in the place of situation of the property.[h] It may be a question whether the same rule would hold if the assignees had obtained possession.[i] An assignment by operation of law is good so as to vest property in the assignees by comity of nations.[j]

FOREIGN LAWS[k] must be proved as matters of fact.[l]

Unwritten Laws must be proved by the opinion of experts.[m]

Written Laws must be proved by the text, or a collection printed by authority, or a copy certified by a proper officer, or, in their absence, perhaps, by opinion of experts as secondary evidence,[n] but the sanction of an oath is required in such case.[o]

JUDGMENTS AND DECREES OF FOREIGN COURTS relating to immovable property within their jurisdiction are binding everywhere. And the rule is the same with regard to movables within their jurisdiction.[q]

Proceedings in rem are held conclusive everywhere if the court had a rightful jurisdiction, founded on actual possession of the subject-matter.[r] But the decree may be avoided for matter apparently erroneous on the face of the record.[s] Proceedings under a garnishee process are held proceedings in rem; and a decree may be pleaded in bar of an action against a trustee or garnishee.[t] But the court must have rightful jurisdiction over the res, unless the court had actual jurisdiction over the person also.[u]

Judgments in personam, regular on their face, which are sought to be enforced in another country, are conclusive evidence, subject to a re-examination, in the courts where the new action is brought, only for irregularity, fraud, or lack of jurisdiction of the cause of action or parties thereto.[v] Any foreign judgment may be impeached for error apparent on its face.[w]

Foreign judgments are admitted as conclusive evidence of all matters directly involved in the case decided where the same question is brought up incidentally.[x]

Under the constitution of the United States, "full force and effect" are to be given the decrees of the courts of any State in those of all other States. This is construed to mean that the judgment so obtained and properly authenticated shall be conclusive evidence of the rights of the parties,[y] but not unless actual per-

The constitution and rules of comity apply only to civil judgments, and not to criminal.[c]

PARTICULAR PERSONAL RELATIONS.

Executors and administrators have no power to sue or be sued by virtue of a foreign appointment as such[d] in the absence of a statute authorizing it. But an executor who has so changed his situation towards the action as to render it his own may sue in a foreign court.[e] Administration must be taken out in the situs (place of situation) of the property,[f] unless otherwise provided by statute.

In general, administration is granted as of course to the executor or administrator entitled under the lex domicilii. In such cases the probate granted in the place of domicil is the principal, and that in the situs ancillary.[g] There is no legal privity between them.[h]

All property of the decedent which is in the jurisdiction of the court granting principal or ancillary administration, or which comes into it if not already taken possession of under a grant of administration, comes under its operation.[i] Ships and cargoes, and the proceeds thereof, complete their voyages and return to the home port.[j] The property of each jurisdiction is held liable for debts due in that jurisdiction, and the surplus is to be remitted to the principal administrator for distribution under the lex domicilii.[k] Each administrator must give priority to claims according to the law of his jurisdiction.[l] But a transmission of effects or their proceeds to another jurisdiction does not divest a creditor's precedence.[m]

Guardians have no power over the property, whether real or personal, of their wards, by virtue of a foreign appointment.[n]

Receivers in equity have no extra territorial powers by virtue of their appointment,[o] and the comity of the States and Territories will hardly help a receiver.[p]

An appointment of a receiver does not vest the funds of a foreign jurisdiction.[q]

Sureties come under general rules, and their contracts are governed by the lex loci; but in case of government bonds the seat of government is held to be the lex loci.[r]

PERSONAL PROPERTY.

Bills of exchange and promissory notes are to be governed, as to validity and interpretation, by the law of the place of making, as are other contracts. The residence of a drawee of a bill of exchange, and the place of making a promissory note, where no other place of payment is specified, is the locus contractus,[s] where the place of address is said to be the place of making. As between the drawee and drawer and other parties (but not as between an indorser and indorsee),[t] each indorsement is considered a new contract.[u] The place of payment is, however, to be considered as the place of making.[v] The better rule as to the rate of interest to be allowed on bills of exchange and promissory notes, where no place of payment is specified, and no rate of interest mentioned, seems to be the interest of the lex loci.[w] The damages recoverable on a bill of exchange not paid are those of the place where the plaintiff is entitled to reimbursement, and are generally fixed by statute.[x] Where the place of payment is specified, the interest of that place must be allowed.[y]

Chattel mortgages, valid, and duly registered under the laws of the State in which the property is situated at the time of the mortgage, will be held valid in another State to which the property is removed, although the regulations there are different.[z] The registration of chattel mortgages and transfer of government and local stocks are frequently made subjects of positive law, which then suspends the law of the domicil. Such mortgage will be respected in preference to claims of citizens of the State into which the property is removed.[a]

CRIMINAL LAW is that branch of jurisprudence which treats of criminal offences. The extreme importance of a knowledge of criminal law is self-evident; for a mistake in point of law, which every person of discretion not only may know, but is bound and presumed to know, is in criminal cases no defence. This law is administered upon the principle that every one must be taken conclusively to know it, without proof that he does know it.[e] This doctrine has been carried so far as to include the case of a foreigner charged with a crime which was no offence in his own country.[f] And further, the criminal law, whether common or statute, is imperative with reference to the conduct of individuals; so that, if a statute forbids or commands a thing to be done, all acts or omissions contrary to the prohibition or command of the statute are offences at common law, and ordinarily indictable as such.[g] When a statute punishes a crime by its legal designation without enumerating the acts which constitute it, then it is necessary to resort to the common law for a definition of the crime with its distinctions and qualifications. So if an act is made criminal, but no mode of prosecution is directed or no punishment provided, the common law (in the absence of a statute to the contrary) furnishes its aid, prescribing the mode of prosecution by indictment, its mode of punishment by fine and imprisonment. So far, therefore, as the rules and principles of the common law are applicable to the administration of the criminal law, and have not been altered or modified by legislative enactment or judicial decisions, they have the same force and effect as laws finally enacted.[h]

The following are some of the leading principles of the criminal law:

1. Every man is presumed to be innocent till the contrary is shown; and if there is any reasonable doubt of his guilt, he is entitled to the benefit of the doubt.

2. In general, no person can be brought to trial till a grand jury on examination of the charge has found reason to hold him to trial.

3. The prisoner is entitled to trial by a jury of his peers, who are chosen from the body of the people with a view to impartiality, and whose decision on questions of fact is final.

4. The question of his guilt is to be determined without reference to his general character, previous history or habits of life.

5. The prisoner cannot be required to criminate himself, nor be compelled to exculpate himself by giving his own testimony on trial.

6. He cannot be twice put in jeopardy for the same offence.

7. He cannot be punished for an act which was not an offence by the law existing at the time of its commission; nor can a severer punishment be inflicted than was declared by law at the time of its commission.

The elements of criminal offences are, in general, as follows:

CRIMES OR PUBLIC OFFENCES are wrongs which the State or Commonwealth notices as injurious to the public, and punishes in what is called a criminal proceeding in its own name.[i] Crimes are defined and punished by statutes and by the common law. Most common law offences are as well known and as precisely ascertained as those which are defined by statutes. Yet from the difficulty of exactly defining and describing every act which ought to be punished, the vital and preserving principle has been adopted that all immoral acts which tend to the prejudice of the community are punishable criminally by courts of justice.[j] Criminal offences are, in general, defined, and the mode of punishment prescribed by statute.

Crimes are sometimes classified according to the degree of punishment incurred by their commission. They are more generally arranged according to the nature of the offence. The following is, perhaps, as complete a classification as the subject admits:

I. Offences against the sovereignty of the State. 1. Treason; 2. Misprision of treason.

II. Offences against the lives and persons of individuals. 1. Murder; 2. Manslaughter; 3. Attempt to kill or murder; 4. Mayhem; 5. Rape; 6. Robbery; 7. Kidnapping; 8. False imprisonment; 9. Abduction; 10. Assault and battery.

III. Offences against public property. 1. Burning or destroying public property; 2. Injury to the same.

IV. Offences against private property. 1. Arson; 2. Burglary; 3. Larceny; 4. Obtaining goods under false pretences; 5. Embezzlement; 6. Malicious mischief.

V. Offences against public justice. 1. Perjury; 2. Bribery; 3. Destroying public records; 4. Counterfeiting public seals; 5. Jail breach; 6. Escape; 7. Resistance to officers; 8. Obstructing legal process; 9. Barratry; 10. Maintenance; 11. Champerty; 12. Contempt of court; 13. Oppression; 14. Extortion; 15. Suppression of evidence; 16. Compounding felony; 17. Misprision of felony.

XI. Offences against the public, individuals, or their property. 1. Conspiracy.

ABDUCTION is the taking and carrying away of a child, a ward, a wife, etc., by force, fraud, persuasion, or open violence.[l]

ABORTION is the criminal act of miscarrying or producing young before the natural time or before the fœtus is perfectly formed, and before it has acquired the power of sustaining an independent life.

When in consequence of the means used to procure an abortion, the death of the mother ensues, it is murder. If the person, intending to procure an abortion, does an act which causes a child to be born so prematurely that it dies in consequence thereof, the person so bringing the child into the world, so putting it in a situation in which it cannot live, is guilty of murder; and this guilt is not lessened from the mere existence of a possibility that something might have been done to prevent its death.[m]

ABUSE is to treat rudely, or with reproachful language, to revile. See AFFRONT, below.

A person is liable for whatever injury arises from the abuse of property, while in his control or custody, unless it is occasioned by inevitable accident or causes wholly beyond their control.

An ACCESSORY is an abettor; an accomplice. One who is guilty of a felony, misdemeanor, or treason; not by committing the offence in person or as principal, but by advising, assisting, or commanding another to commit the crime, or assisting him to escape, or concealing him. One who not being the principal is in some way concerned in the commission of the offence, either before or after its commission. No one who is principal can be accessory. In many States all are considered principals. An accessory after the fact is one who, knowing an offence to have been committed, assists, comforts, conceals, receives or relieves the offender.[n] An accessory before the fact is one who, being absent at the time an offence is committed, yet commands, counsels, or procures another to commit it.[o] When the act is committed through the agency of a person who has no legal discretion nor a will, as in the case of a child or insane person, the inciter, though absent when the crime was committed, will be considered not an accessory, for no one can be an accessory to the acts of a madman, but a principal.[p] But if the instrument is aware of the consequences of his act, he is a principal, and the employer, if absent when the offence is committed, is an accessory before the fact,[q] or, if he is present, a principal in the second degree,[r] unless the instrument concur in the act merely for the purpose of detecting and punishing the employer, in which case he is considered as an innocent agent.[s]

An accomplice is an abettor, an accessory, and confederate; an associate in crime; a partner or partaker in guilt. One who is in some way concerned in the commission of a crime, though not as a principal. All persons who have been concerned in the commission of a crime, all particeps criminis, whether they are considered in strict legal propriety as principals in the first or second degree, or merely as accessories before or after the fact.[t]

It is a rule of practice that a jury should not convict on the unsupported evidence of an accomplice; and the judge will, in general, advise the jury to acquit, unless the testimony of the accomplice is corroborated, not only as to the circumstances of the offence, but also as to the participation of the accused in the transaction; and where several parties are charged, that it is not sufficient that the accomplice should be confirmed as to one or more of the prisoners, to justify a conviction of those prisoners with respect to whom there is no confirmation.[u]

AN ACCUSATION is a charge, in writing, upon oath or affirmation, against one or more persons of a felony or misdemeanor. An accusation is generally made in the form of an affidavit or complaint before some magistrate authorized to try, acquit, bind over, or convict the offender. In courts of competent and general jurisdiction the accusation is presented in the form of an indictment or information. An indictment is based upon the finding of a grand jury. An information is based upon the affidavit or complaint of any competent person supported by his oath or affirmation.

In an accusation before a magistrate, it is sufficient, as a general rule, to describe the offence in the words of the statute.[v]

The essential requisites of an accusation are:

1. It must be presented to some court having jurisdiction of the offence stated therein.

2. It must be made by a person competent to testify.

3. It must be made in writing, under oath or affirmation of the accuser.

4. It must charge the person accused with the commission of a felony or misdemeanor; for this purpose, the charge must contain a certain description of the felony or misdemeanor of which the defendant is accused, and a statement of the facts by which it is constituted, so as to identify the accusation.[w]

5. It must be in the English language; but if any document in a foreign language be necessarily introduced, it should be set out in the original tongue, and then translated, showing its application.[x]

6. It must be subscribed by the accuser.

7. It must be sworn to before an officer authorized to administer an oath.

The formal requisites of an accusation are:

1. The venue must always be laid in the county where the offence has been committed, although the charge be in its nature transitory, as a battery.[y] The venue is stated in the margin, thus: "State of ——, —— County, ss."

2. The name of the defendant; but in case an error has been made in this respect, it is cured by the plea of the defendant,[z] and the facts are entered accordingly.

3. The names of third persons, when they must be necessarily mentioned in the complaint, should be stated with such certainty as to sufficiently inform the defendant who are his accusers. When, however, the names of third persons cannot be ascertained, it is sufficient, in some cases, to state "a certain person or persons to this affiant unknown."[a]

4. The time when the offence was committed should, in general, be stated to be on a specific year and day;[b] but, though it is necessary that a day certain should be stated in the complaint, yet, in general, the prosecutor may give evidence of an offence committed on any other day previous to the making of the accusation.[c]

5. The offence should be properly described. And, as a general rule, it is sufficient to describe the offence in the words of the statute.

The whole facts of the case necessary to make it appear judicially to the court that the accuser has gone upon sufficient premises, should be set forth; but there should be no unnecessary matter, nor anything which, on its face, makes the accusation repugnant, inconsistent, or absurd.

The offence must not be stated in the disjunctive; as, that the defendant committed, or caused to be committed, etc., so as to leave it uncertain on what it is intended to rely as an accusation.[d]

The following rules should be observed in drawing an accusation:

1. Keep near the words of the statute.—The pleader must keep reasonably near the words of the statute, or there will be a variance, and on this ground the accusation will be defective.[e]

2. Negative averments to show affirmatively an offence.—No accusation is sufficient which alleges an act or omission in itself innocent, unless it proceed to disclose circumstances which render such act or omission illegal.[f]

It is not necessary that the negative averments should be made in strict conformity to the exact words of the statute; whatever amounts to a substantial negative is sufficient.[g]

An unnecessary negative will be rejected as surplusage; it needs no proof.

3. If there is an exception in the enacting clause of the statute, the party pleading must show that the defendant is not within the exception; but if there be an exception in a subsequent clause, or a subsequent statute, that is matter of defence, and is to be shown by the other party.[h]

4. Matters of defence are never necessary in an accusation.

Amendment of Accusation.—The accusation, the accused being present and consenting, may, of course, be amended to an extent to which it is not easy to set limits;[i] or if the evidence satisfies the magistrate that a crime different from the one charged against the prisoner has been committed by him, he may hold him until a fresh accusation is drawn, covering the crime as proved.[j] In this case the prisoner is held on the original accusation, which, under such circumstances, the magistrate is not bound to dismiss until the proper accusation is made against him. But if a person known to the magistrate happens to be in his court, and he suspects an absent person has an accusation to make against him for a misdemeanor, he cannot detain him and send for the person. The magistrate should have the charge actually made before he detains the party.[k] Unless it be for a felony.

ACQUITTAL is a deliverance from the charge of an offence. A judicial decree of innocence, by a finding of the court, or the verdict of a jury. Acquittals in fact are those where upon the trial the defendant is pronounced innocent of the offence with which he is charged. Acquittals in law are those which take place by operation of law, as where one is charged as an accessory or accomplice, and the principal is acquitted.[l] An acquittal by a court of competent jurisdiction is a bar to any prosecution for the offence alleged in the first accusation, or for any inferior degree thereof.

AN ADMONITION is a reprimand from a judge to a person accused, on being discharged, warning him of the consequences of his conduct, and intimating to him that should he be again guilty of the same fault for which he is admonished, he will be punished with greater severity.[m]

ADULTERATION is the unlawful act of corrupting, or debasing, or rendering an article impure and unwholesome. Converting a pure and genuine article into something of less value for the purpose of deceit and gain, as an adulteration of food or drink.

ADULTERY is the voluntary sexual intercourse of a married person with a person other than the offender's husband or wife.[n] Violation of the marriage bed; a civil injury and crime which introduces or may introduce into a family illegitimate or spurious offspring. It is a criminal offence, punishable by fine or imprisonment, or both.

AFFRAY is a fight between two or more persons, by agreement, in a public place.[o] No quarrelsome or threatening words will amount to an affray,[p] there must have been a fight, and in a public place, for fighting in private is assault and battery, and not an affray.[q]

AFFRONT is uncivil encounter; ill treatment; insult; offence; outrage. Anything contemptuous or reproachful that excites or justifies resentment, as foul language or personal abuse. It usually expresses a less degree of abuse than insult.[r]

"It appears probable that judicial combat was originally permitted in order to determine the points respecting personal character or reputation of individuals, and was afterwards extended not only to criminal cases but to questions concerning property. Thus: If any man shall say to another these reproachful words: 'You are not a man equal to other men;' or, 'You have not the heart of a man;' and the other shall reply: 'I am as good a man as you.' Let them meet upon the highway. If he who first gave offence appear, and the person offended absent himself, let the latter be deemed a worse man than he was called; let him not be admitted to give evidence in judgment, either for man or woman; and let him not have the privilege of making a testament. If he who gave the offence be absent, and only the person offended be present, etc., then let him who absented himself be deemed infamous, because he uttered words he durst not support. If both appear, properly armed, and the person offended shall fall in the combat, let a half compensation be paid for his death. But if the person who gave offence shall fall, let it be imputed to his own rashness. 'The petulance of his tongue hath been fatal to him.' Let him lie in the field without any compensation being demanded for his death."[s] This mode of settlement in modern times takes the form of the duel, a practice without sanction of law or morals, and prohibited under heavy penalties. By the laws of the Salians, if any person called another a "hare" (i. e., a timid, cowardly fellow), or accused him of having left his shield on the field of battle, he was ordained to pay a large fine.[t] So, if one called another "Cenitus" (a term of reproach equivalent to "Arga," below), he was bound to pay a high fine.[u] And by the law of the Lombards, if one called another "Arga" (i. e., a good-for-nothing fellow), he might immediately challenge him to combat.[v] Courts Military and Chivalry, as courts of honor, were to give satisfaction to such as were aggrieved on that point; a point of a nature so nice and delicate that its wrongs and injuries escape the notice of the common law, and yet are fit to be redressed somewhere. Such, for instance, as calling a man a coward, or the more modern villifying epithets, or giving him the lie; they are productive of no immediate damage to his person or property, yet they are such injuries as will prompt every man of spirit to demand some honorable amends.[w] The statutes of many of the States take cognizance of these offences in some general form.

AFORETHOUGHT is premeditation. It is the length of time during which the accused has entertained the thought of committing the offence. The length of time is not very material, provided he has in fact entertained such thought or premeditation; he is thereby rendered criminal in a greater degree than if he had committed the offence without premeditation.[x]

AGGRAVATION is the act or quality of increasing enormity, heinousness, severity, or wrong. In criminal actions one of the rules respecting variances is, that cumulative allegations, or such as merely operate in aggravation, are immaterial, provided that sufficient is proved to establish the same right, offence, or justification included in the charge, claim, or defence set up. The rule runs through the whole criminal law, that it is invariably enough to prove so much of the charge as shows that the defendant committed a substantive crime therein specified.[y] Thus, on an indictment for murder, the prisoner may be convicted of manslaughter, for the averment of malice aforethought is merely matter of aggravation.[z]

AIDING AND ABETTING is the act of being in such communication, and so situated during the perpetration of a crime, as to readily aid the perpetrators thereof. Actual presence is not necessary; it is sufficient if so situated as to come readily to the assistance of his fellows.[a] Although not the direct perpetrator of a crime, yet if the person be present at its commission doing some act to render aid to the perpetrator thereof he is, in contemplation of the law, an aider and abettor.[b]

AID AND COMFORT is assistance or encouragement, either by furnishing strength or means to effect a purpose, or to prevent or remove evil. Treason against the United States shall consist only in levying war against them, or in adhering to their enemies, giving them aid and comfort.[c]

AMERCEMENT is the pecuniary penalty or fine imposed upon an offender by a judicial tribunal.

AMNESTY is an act of oblivion; a general pardon of the offences of subjects against the government, and usually upon condition that they return to their allegiance within a given period. It is the proclamation of such act. Amnesty is either express or implied, general or limited: express when in direct terms; implied when it results from a treaty of peace made between the contending parties;[d] general when it applies to all; limited when certain classes are excluded from its operation. It differs from pardon, for pardon is given to one who is certainly guilty, or has been convicted, while amnesty is given to those who may have been so. Amnesty is the act of the sovereign power whose object is to efface and cause a crime or misdemeanor to be forgotten; pardon is the act of the same power whose object is to exempt the individual from the punishment which the law applies for the crime he has committed.[e] Pardon remits a part or the whole of punishment awarded. Amnesty destroys the effect of the criminal act. Pardon is given to individuals after conviction Amnesty is granted either before or after.

AMOTION is the unlawful taking of personal property out of the possession of the owner, or of one who has a special authority in them.

ANIMO; ANIMUS. See INTENTION, below.

ARRAIGNMENT is the act of calling a defendant before the court or tribunal to answer to the accusation, charge, or impeachment contained in the information or indictment.

Arraignment consists: 1. In calling the prisoner before the court for the purpose of identifying him as the person charged in the information or indictment with the commission of the offence.[f] 2. In reading the information or indictment to the accused in order to enable him fully to understand the charge against him.[g] 3. In asking the prisoner, "How say you," or "What say you, P. R.: are you guilty or not guilty?"[h] Thereupon, if the prisoner confesses the charge, and it appears to the satisfaction of the court that he fully comprehends the effect of his plea of "guilty," he at once, or after hearing such evidence as he may require, or after deliberation, pronounces judgment. If, however, he answers "not guilty," this plea is entered of record, and forms the issue for trial. If he fails to answer, or cannot or will not answer, the court orders a plea of "not guilty" entered in his behalf.

When the offence charged is punishable by fine only, personal appearance for arraignment is unnecessary, provided some responsible person appears in his behalf.

ARREST is the taking of a person into custody that he may be held to answer for a public offence.

An arrest is the taking, attaching, or seizing a person or thing, either by a public officer in execution of the command of some court, or minister of justice, or by a private person, according to the command or permission of the law.[i]

An arrest is made by an actual restraint of the person of the defendant, or by his submission to the custody of the officers.[j] The arresting of an offender and the retaking of him on fresh pursuit after an escape constitutes but one effective arrest.[k]

An officer must inform the defendant that he acts under the authority of a warrant, and must show the warrant if required.[l]

If, after notice of intention to arrest the defendant, he either flee or forcibly resist, the officer may use all necessary means to effect the arrest.[m]

To constitute an arrest it is not ordinarily sufficient that words of arrest be spoken; there must be something done by way of actual physical restraint, though it is enough, if the party arresting touch the other "even with the end of his finger."[n] So, if a bailiff comes into a room, and tells the defendant he arrests him, and locks the door, that is an arrest; for he is in custody of the officer.[o] So, also, if there is neither a touching of the person, nor other force employed in the first instance, yet, if the party to be arrested submits on being informed of the intended arrest, nothing more is required, especially when he is in the power of the officer, to make the arrest complete.[p]

Thus: If the bailiff, who has process against one, says to him, when he is on horseback or in a coach, "You are my prisoner, I have a writ against you," upon which he submits, turns back, or goes with him, though the bailiff never touched him, yet it is an arrest, because he submitted to the process; but if instead of going with the bailiff, he had gone or fled from him, it could be no arrest unless the bailiff laid hold of him.[q]

Restraint does not alone constitute an arrest; 'tis the duty of one seeking to arrest another to make his purpose known,[r] unless the circumstances are such as to render the purpose obvious;[s] for, where circumstances are such as to make the intention to apprehend plain to the mind of him who is to be apprehended, he need not be told this; and the arrest will be legal, and the resistance of the arrested person illegal, the same as if the purpose had been announced in words.[t]

A person making an arrest should not use unnecessary violence.[u] Though the officer may lay hands on another in order to serve him with process,[v] yet he cannot drag about or strike the defendant, unless these acts are rendered necessary by his resistance.[w] He may make use of so much force as is necessary to accomplish his object, and cannot be made liable by the defendant, except for wanton violence.[x] Officers of the law, when engaged in the performance of their duties, are invested with a peculiar prerogative. If resisted when so employed, and the party resisting be killed in the struggle, such homicide is justifiable. And, on the other hand, if the party having such authority, in exercising it properly, happen to be killed, it will be murder in all who take part in such resistance,[y] though there be no malice.[z] An officer is justified, who, in the execution of his office, either in a civil or criminal case, kills a person who assaults and resists him. The resistance will justify the officer in proceeding to the last extremity. So that, in all cases, whether civil or criminal, where persons having authority to arrest and imprison, and using the proper means for that purpose, are resisted in so doing, they may repel force with force, and need not give back; and if the party making resistance is unavoidably killed in the struggle, this homicide is justifiable.[a] But where a party does not resist, but merely flies to avoid the arrest, the conduct of the officer should be cautiously regulated by the nature of the proceeding. For in civil cases, and also in the case of a breach of the peace, or any other misdemeanor, short of felony, if the officer should pursue a defendant flying in order to avoid an arrest, and should kill him in the pursuit, this will be murder or manslaughter, according to the circumstances by which such homicide may have been attended.[b]

If a man is committing a felony, and an officer attempts to arrest him, yet he runs away, and the officer calls on him to stop, if he will not stop, the officer is justified in shooting at him to compel him to stop; but if the offence is a misdemeanor, he has no right to take this extreme measure.[c]

Where the arrest has actually been made, whether for felony or misdemeanor, if the person attempts to break away, he may be killed to prevent it, provided this extreme measure is necessary.[d]

Where there is an attempt at an unlawful arrest, as, for instance, where an officer undertakes to arrest without a warrant, and not on fresh pursuit, one whose crime is no more than a misdemeanor, the person on whom the attempt is made may lawfully resist, though not to the taking of life;[e] and if, in such resistance, he takes the officer's life, his crime will only be manslaughter.[f] So, the person thus unlawfully arrested is justified in escaping if he can;[g] and an attempt to re-arrest him will be equally unlawful with the first arrest.[h] But there are circumstances in which, if the person arrested submits, he waives an objection which he might have taken; and in these circumstances, he has no right afterward to escape.[i]

One having custody of an arrested person should treat him well, but may even inflict death to prevent his escape, where no other means are available. A fortiori, an officer who has a prisoner under arrest may tie him if this is necessary; and where an officer acts honestly and from pure motives, he is to be himself the sole judge of the necessity of such a measure as this.[j] If, then, having arrested the prisoner lawfully, the latter breaks away, he may retake him without any fresh warrant,[k] and this even where the officer has consented to the escape.[l]

arrest such person; and he will not be liable, either in a civil or criminal prosecution, should the suspicion prove unfounded.[m] But if the offence has not in fact been committed by any one, he may be compelled, on a civil suit, to pay damages to the party arrested, however strong or reasonable may have been his suspicions.[n] And these rules extend to all felonies, even to petit larceny.[o]

When a crime is a felony, the law casts upon all persons present the duty to make the arrest. It is also a duty of precisely the same nature to interfere to prevent the commission of a felony or treason, and this duty carries with it the right; consequently, though an attempt to commit a felony is a misdemeanor, and not a felony, yet if a man finds another attempting to commit a felony, he may arrest him.[p]

In misdemeanors, a private person, or an officer acting without a warrant, cannot make an arrest for a misdemeanor committed on an occasion which has already past.[q] It is the duty of every good citizen to endeavor to suppress a riot; and when he finds a mistaken multitude engaging in treasonable practices, to the subversion of all peace and good order, he is protected by law in coming forward with other well-disposed characters to repel them by force.[r] Affrays may be suppressed by any private person present, who is justifiable in endeavoring to part the combatants, whatever consequence may ensue.[s]

By officers of the law. Whenever the circumstances of a case would justify a private person in making an arrest, without a warrant, they will equally justify a constable, sheriff, or watchman.[t] Where an officer, authorized by statute to make arrests without warrant, finds a person in the act of committing a criminal offence, it is not necessary to the lawfulness of the attempt to arrest him to first inform him of the charge upon which the attempted arrest is made, where the officer and the cause of arrest are known to the offender.[u] But for a past offence, below a felony, officers of the peace cannot, any more than a private person, arrest the offenders without a warrant.

When a magistrate is commanded by statute to keep the peace, by construction, he is authorized to call upon his officers, and upon private individuals, for such assistance as the nature of his office and the particular circumstances render it incumbent on them to perform; and such magistrate may lawfully, by word of mouth, authorize any one to arrest another, who shall be guilty of any actual breach of the peace in his presence,[v] or shall be engaged in a riot in his presence.[w] If an offence is committed in the court of a magistrate, he may verbally authorize the attending officer to take the offender into custody; no warrant being necessary in the first instance.[x] Likewise, if an arrest is made without a warrant, in a case where such an arrest is lawful, and the offender is brought before the magistrate, the latter may take jurisdiction and proceed to judgment without issuing a warrant of arrest. "Why issue a warrant for the apprehension of a party already in custody?"[y] But a written complaint (under oath) against the party, setting out his offence, is as necessary in such a case as in any other.[z]

Sheriffs[a] and constables are ex-officio conservators of the peace; so, in a measure, are watchmen and other like officers.

What is a reasonable and proper cause to suspect the person who is to be arrested is a question of law; and it is a question of fact whether or not the circumstances constituting such cause exist; and on the trial of an officer at the suit of the arrested party, the question is ordinarily to be submitted to the jury as a mixed one of law and fact.[b] A proclamation by the governor, published in pursuance of law, announcing the commission of a felony, is a sufficient justification for a peace officer who arrests the suspected felon.[c] A watchman and beadles have authority at common law to arrest and detain in prison, for examination, persons walking the streets at night, whom there is reasonable ground to suspect of felony, although there is no proof of a felony having been committed.[d]

From time immemorial constables and watchmen had authority, without warrant, to arrest those whom they saw engaged in an affray or breach of the peace, and to detain them until they should find proper sureties.[e] And the officers of government have authority, derived from the general rights of the government, without any statute whatever on the subject, to exercise all necessary force for the prevention of crime, either by the arrest of individuals, or by the seizure and detention of the instruments of crime;[f] and this applies to sheriffs, constables, and the like.

Officers' power to call assistance. The chief difference between the power and duty of an officer and a private person, in respect to such arrest, is, that the former has the greater authority to demand assistance of others, and is liable to a severer fine for any neglect of this kind, and has no sure way to discharge himself of the arrest of any person apprehended by him for felony, without bringing him before a magistrate in order to be examined; whereas, a private person, having made such an arrest, needs only to deliver his prisoner into the hands of the constable.[g] Accordingly, it is in the power of an officer making an arrest, though without a warrant, to call in the aid of the bystanders—for the sheriff may call out the power of the county, and the officer may command the inhabitants of his precinct. And this extends not merely to the arrest, but equally to the detaining of the prisoner after the arrest is made. If any one obstructs the officer in the performance of these duties, he may at once be taken into custody.

—— ARREST UNDER A WARRANT. Where a warrant in due form is put into the hand of an officer, to whom it is addressed, he is justified in executing it, if the magistrate who issued it had jurisdiction over the cause, even though it was improperly or unlawfully obtained. But it is otherwise if the warrant is illegal on its face, or if the magistrate had no jurisdiction; which question of jurisdiction the officer must decide at his peril.[h] And if, in a civil case, an arrest is made after the process is returnable, the officer becomes thereby a trespasser.[i] Where process under which an officer makes an arrest is voidable, by reason of some irregularity or mistake, he is justified; though he is not when it is void.[j]

One who is called upon to assist an officer in making an arrest under warrant, and who acts in good faith, is justified, though the process is not valid to the extent of justifying the officer himself; for if all those summoned had to examine and judge the legality of the process, and then to act upon their own responsibility, this necessary power in the officer would, in practice, be paralyzed to a great degree.[k]

The warrant must be executed by a public officer (as the sheriff or constable of the county, marshal of any incorporated city), or some person specially appointed, in writing, by the court or magistrate.[l]

Form of Special Appointment on the Warrant.

I hereby appoint S. A. to execute the within writ. [Signature, seal, and official title.]

The warrant must be executed by the officer or person to whom it is directed and delivered. And in all cases where an arrest is made by virtue of a warrant, the warrant, if demanded, at least should be produced.[m] Where the officer is not known to be such, he must show his authority, his warrant, before making the arrest.[n] If the officer permits the prisoner to take the warrant into his hands to peruse, and the latter refuses to return it, he may use "just so must violence as is necessary to retake it, and no more;"[o] but if he cannot retake it by reason of its destruction, or otherwise, he may still execute the command of the warrant, and return the facts.

The officer should, as soon as he conveniently can, though he may do so at any time afterward until the object of the warrant is satisfied,[p] proceed with secrecy to find out and actually arrest the party,[q] not only in order to secure him, but also to subject him, and all other persons, to the consequences of escape and rescue. And if he refuse or neglect to execute the warrant, he will be punishable for his disobedience or neglect.[r]

—— Breaking Doors, etc. To make an arrest in criminal actions the officer may break open any outer or inner door or window of a dwelling-house, or other building, or any other enclosure, if, after notice of his office and purpose, he be refused admittance.[s] But this does not authorize any officer executing a search-warrant to enter any house or building not described in the warrant.

A private individual, in order to justify breaking open doors without a warrant, must, in general, prove the actual guilt of the party arrested; and it will not suffice to show a felony has actually been committed, or that reasonable ground of suspicion existed. But an officer acting bona fide on the positive charge of another will be excused, and the party making the accusation will alone be liable.[t]

The breaking of an outer door is, in general, so violent, obnoxious, and dangerous a proceeding that it should be adopted only in extreme cases, where an immediate arrest is requisite.

The house of a third person, if the offender fly to it for refuge, is not privileged, but may be broken open after the usual demand; for it may even be so upon civil process.[u] But it is at the peril of the officer, that the party against whom he obtained the warrant be found there.[v] This doctrine is also recognized as respects civil process.[w]

If a party be once actually arrested and escaped from custody, any door may be broken open to retake him, after proper demand of admittance.[x]

When an officer, after obtaining admittance, is locked in, or otherwise prevented from retiring, and whether executing civil or criminal process, he may break out by any means in his power. And a sheriff may break open the door of a house to rescue his bailiffs, unlawfully detained within it.[y]

An officer, once entering a house, either upon civil or criminal process, may, after ineffectually demanding admittance, break open any inner door that obstructs his progress.[z]

—— DISPOSITION OF ARRESTED PERSON.

When Arrested without a Warrant. When a private person arrests a man without a warrant, he should cause him, as soon as convenience will permit, to be brought before some justice of the peace, by whom the prisoner may be examined and bailed, or committed to prison.[a] Where a private person has apprehended another assisting in an affray, he may lawfully detain him till the heat is over, and then deliver him to the constable.[b]

An officer having arrested the offender, in case of an affray, may confine him till the heat of his passion, or intemperance is over, or till he can bring him before a justice of the peace;[c] and in all cases, he should carry the offender before a justice of the peace as soon as circumstances will permit.[d] And a constable arresting a man on suspicion of felony, must take him before a justice of the peace to be examined as soon as he reasonably can; and cannot justify handcuffing a prisoner, unless it be necessary to prevent his escape.[e]

When Arrested under a Warrant.—"When an officer has made his arrest, he is, as soon as possible, to bring the party to the jail, or the justice, according to the import of the warrant,"[f] if permitted or required by the law. If he be guilty of unnecessary delay, it is a breach of duty.[g] But if the time be unseasonable, as in or near the night, whereby he cannot attend the justice, or, if there be danger of a rescue, or the party be ill, and unable at present to be brought, he may, as the case require, secure him or detain him in a house till the next day, or until it may be reasonable to bring him.[h]

When brought before the magistrate the prisoner is still considered to be in the custody of the officer, until he has been discharged, bailed, or committed to prison.[i] And the officer may keep his warrant for his own justification, and need only return to the magistrate what he has done in pursuance of his commands.[j]

ARSON is the malicious burning of another's house[k]—out-house, ship or shipping, store-house, or other property. The term "house" comprehends not only the very mansion-house, or residence itself, but all out-houses which are a part thereof, though not contiguous thereto, nor under the same roof, such as the barn, cow-house, dairy-house, mill-house, sheep-house, stable, or the like, being within the dwelling-house enclosure, or same common fence as the dwelling or mansion itself.[l]

The burning must have been both malicious and wilful,[m] that is, it must be done intentionally, not accidentally. Generally, if the act is proved to have been done wilfully, it may be inferred to have been done maliciously, unless the contrary is proved.[n] An intent to injure or defraud will be conclusively inferred from the wilful act of firing.[o] But this inference will only arise where the act is wilful; therefore, if the fire appears to be the result of accident, the party who is the cause of it will not be liable. The subject of arson is very generally regulated by statute.

ASPORTATION is the felonious removal of goods from the place where they were deposited. A theft, though the goods are not carried from the house or apartment.[p]

ASSASSINATION is murder committed for hire, without provocation or cause of resentment given to the murderer by the person upon whom the crime is committed.[q]

AN ASSAULT is an unlawful setting upon one's person; an attempt or offer to beat another without touching his person.[r] It is an unlawful offer or attempt, with force or violence, to do a corporal hurt to another. It is force unlawfully directed or applied to the person of another, under such circumstances as to cause a well-founded apprehension of immediate peril.

Aggravated assault is one committed with the intention of committing some additional crime.

Simple assault is one committed with no intention to do any other injury.

Any act causing a well-founded apprehension of immediate peril from a force already partially or fully put in motion, is an assault,[s] unless justifiable. But if justifiable, it is not necessarily a battery or an assault.

There are many other acts which are in the eye of the law assaults. Thus, if a master takes indecent liberties with a female scholar, without her consent, it is an assault.[t] If a medical practitioner unnecessarily strips a female patient naked under pretence that he cannot otherwise judge of her illness, it is an assault, if he assisted in taking off her clothes.[u] And carnal connection with a girl fourteen years of age, under pretence of thereby treating her medically, she making no resistance from a bone fide belief that such was the case, was held an assault.[v] An unlawful imprisonment is also an assault.[w]

Assault is generally coupled with battery, and for the excellent practical reason that they generally go together; but the assault is rather the initiation or offer to commit the act of which the battery is the consummation. An assault is included in every battery.[x] Where a person is only assaulted—still the form of the complaint is the same as where there has been a battery: "That the defendant assaulted, and beat, bruised, and wounded the plaintiff."[y] One who incites or procures another to commit an assault, though not present at its commission, nor otherwise participating therein, may be indicted and punished as a principal.[z]

AN UNLAWFUL ASSEMBLY is the meeting of three or more persons to do an unlawful act—although they may not carry their purpose into execution. It differs from a riot or rout, because in each of the latter cases there is some act done besides the simple meeting.[a]

ATTAINDER upon a felon is, in effect, in general terms, that all his estate, real and personal, is forfeited to the State; that his blood is corrupted, and so nothing passes by inheritance to, from, or through him;[b] that he cannot sue in a court of justice.[c] The effect of attainder is abrogated by the constitution, q. v.

AN ATTEMPT is an endeavor to accomplish a crime, carried beyond mere preparation, but falling short of its execution or any part of it.[d] It is an intent combined with an act which falls short of the offence intended.[e] There must be an intent to commit some offence which would be punishable if committed, either from its own character or that of its natural or probable consequences;[f] and the offence intended must at least be a misdemeanor.[g]

BANISHMENT is a punishment inflicted upon criminals by compelling them to quit a city, place, or country for a specified period of time, or for life.[h]

BARRATRY is the offence of frequently exciting and stirring up quarrels and suits, either at law or otherwise.[i] An indictment for this offence must charge the offender with being a common barrator,[j] and the proof must show at least three instances of offending.[k] An attorney is not liable to an indictment for maintaining another in a groundless action.[l]

BATTERY is an unlawful beating, or other wrongful physical violence or constraint inflicted on a human being without his consent.[m] It must be either wilfully committed, or proceed from the want of due care.[n] Hence, an injury, be it never so small, done to the person of another in an angry, spiteful, rude, or insolent manner,[o] as by spitting in his face,[p] or on his body,[q] or in any way touching him in anger,[r] or violently pushing him,[s] are batteries in the eye of the law.[t] And anything attached to the person partakes of its inviolabilty. If, therefore, A. strikes a cane in the hands of B. it is a battery.[u]

A battery may be justified:

1. As a mode of correction—a parent may correct his child; a master his apprentice; a school-teacher his scholar;[v] and a superior officer one under his command.[w]

2. As a necessary means of defence of the person against the plaintiff's assault in the following instances: in defence of himself, his wife,[x] his child, and his servant.[y] So, likewise, the wife may justify a battery in defending her husband,[z] the child its parent,[a] and the servant his master or mistress. In these relations the party need not wait until a blow has been given, for then he might come too late, and be disabled from warding off a second stroke, or from protecting the person assailed. Care, however, must be taken that the battery do not exceed the bounds of necessary defence and protection; for it is only permitted as a means to arrest an impending evil, which might otherwise overwhelm the party, and not as a punishment, retaliation, or revenge, for the injurious attempt.[b] The degree of force necessary to repel an assault will naturally depend upon and be proportioned to the violence of the assailant; but with this limitation any degree is justifiable.[c]

3. As a defence to one's property. If the plaintiff is in the act of entering peaceably upon the defendant's land, or, having entered, is discovered, not committing violence, a request to depart is necessary in the first instance.[d] And if the plaintiff refuses, the defendant may then gently lay hands upon the plaintiff and remove him from the premises, and for this purpose may use, if necessary, any degree of force short of striking the plaintiff; as, by thrusting him off.[e] If the plaintiff resists, the defendant may oppose force to force.[f] But if the plaintiff is in the act of forcibly entering upon the land, or, having entered, is subverting the soil, cutting down a tree or the like,[g] a previous request is unnecessary, and the defendant may immediately lay hands upon the plaintiff.[h] A man may justify a battery in defence of his personal property without a previous request, if another forcibly attempt to take away such property.[i]

4. As a means of preserving the peace, in the exercise of an office, under process of court, and in aid of an authority at law. See ARREST, below.

BAWDY HOUSES are houses of ill-fame, kept for the resort and unlawful commerce of lewd people of both sexes. It must be reputed of ill-fame;[j] it may be a single room;[k] but more than one woman must live and resort there.[l] It need not be kept for lucre.[m] Such a house is a common nuisance,[n] and the keeper may be indicted; and, if a married woman, either alone or with her husband.[o] One who assists in establishing such a house is guilty of an indictable misdemeanor,[p] including a lessor who has knowledge.[q] A charge of keeping a bawdy house is actionable, because it is an offence which is indictable at common law as a common nuisance, and clearly involves moral turpitude.[r] See BROTHEL, below.

BIGAMY is the wilfully contracting a second marriage, when the contracting party knows that a first is subsisting—the state of a man having two wives, or of a woman having two husbands, living at the same time. When the man has more than two wives, or the woman more than two husbands, living at the same time, then the party is said to have committed polygamy; but the name of bigamy is more frequently given to this offence in legal proceedings.[s] If a woman who has a husband living marries another person, she is punishable, though her husband has voluntarily withdrawn from her, and remained absent and unheard of for any term of time less than seven years, and though she honestly believes, at the time of her second marriage, that he is dead.[t] On trial of a woman for bigamy, whose first husband had been absent from her for more than seven years, the jury found that they had no evidence at the time of her second marriage she knew that he was alive, but that she had means of acquiring knowledge of that fact, had she chosen to make use of them. It was held upon this finding that the conviction could not be supported.[u] If a man is prosecuted for bigamy, his first wife cannot be called to prove her marriage with the defendant.[v] Where the first marriage was made abroad, it must be shown to have been valid when made.[w] Reputation is not sufficient to establish the fact of th first marriage.[x] If the second marriage be a foreign State, it is not bigamy,[y] except statute.[z] The second marriage is not necessarily valid.[a]

The punishment of this offence varies in the different States.

BILLS OF INDICTMENT are written accusations of one or more persons of a crime or misdemeanor, lawfully presented to a grand jury. If twelve or more members of the jury are satisfied that the accused ought to be tried, the return is made, "A true bill;" but when no sufficient ground is shown for putting the accused on trial, a return is made, "Not found," "Not a true bill," or "Ignoramus."[b] See ACCUSATION, above.

BILL OF PAINS AND PENALTIES is a special act of the legislature which inflicts a punishment less than death upon persons supposed to be guilty of high offences, such as treason and felony, without any conviction in the ordinary course of judicial proceedings.[c] It differs from a bill of attainder in this, that the punishment inflicted by the latter is death. It has been thought by some that the clause in the federal constitution prohibiting bills of attainder includes bills of pains and penalties.[d]

BLASPHEMY consists of speaking evil of the Deity with an impious purpose to derogate from the divine majesty, and to alienate the minds of others from the reverence of God. It is purposely using words concerning God calculated and designed to impair and destroy the reverence, respect, and confidence due to him as the intelligent Creator, ruler, and judge of the world. It embraces the idea of detraction, when used towards the Supreme Being; as "calumny" usually carries the same idea when applied to an individual. It is a wilful and malicious attempt to lessen men's reverence of God by denying his existence, or his attributes as an intelligent Creator, governor, and judge of men, and to prevent their having confidence in him as such.[e]

The statutes of the different States enacted against this offence are not understood in all cases to have abrogated the common law; the rule being that where the statute does not vary the class or character of an offence, but only authorizes a particular mode of proceeding and of punishment, the sanction is cumulative, and the common law is not taken away. Neither these statutes nor the common law doctrine is repugnant to the constitutions of those States in which the question has arisen.[f]

purity of the bailment by the wrongful act of the bailee. Thus, where a carrier has agreed to carry certain bales of goods which were delivered to him, to Southampton, but carried them to another place, broke open the bales, took the goods contained in them feloniously, and converted them to his own use, the majority of the judges held that if the party had sold the entire bales it would not have been felony; "but as he broke them, and took what was in them, he did it without warrant," and was so guilty of a felony.[g] If a miller steals part of the meal, "although the corn was given to him to grind, nevertheless if he steal it, it is a felony, being taken from the rest."[h]

BREAKING DOORS. See ARREST, above.

BRIBERY is the (giving or) receiving or offering any undue reward by or to any person whomsoever, whose ordinary profession or business relates to the administration of public justice (as well as all other officers), in order to influence his behavior in office, and to induce him to act contrary to his duty, and the known rules of honesty and integrity.[i] An attempt to bribe, though unsuccessful, has been holden to be criminal, and the offender may be indicted.[j]

BROTHEL is a bawdy house; a common habitation of prostitutes. Such places have always been deemed common nuisances. For a history of these pernicious places.[k]

BUGGERY. See SODOMY, below.

BURGLARY is the breaking and entering the house of another in the night time, with intent to commit a felony therein, whether the felony be actually committed or not.[l]

1. To be burglary the breaking and entry must be felonious; if a felony, however, be committed, the act will be prima facie evidence of an intent to commit it.[m] If the breaking and entry be with an intention to commit a trespass, or other misdemeanor, and nothing further is done, the offence will not be burglary.[n]

2. To be burglary, there must be both a breaking and an entry, or an exit. An actual breaking takes place when the burglar breaks or removes any part of the house or the fastenings provided for it, with violence.[o] Breaking a window, taking a pane of glass out, by breaking or bending the nails or other fastenings;[p] cutting and tearing down a netting of twine nailed over an open window;[q] raising a latch, when the door is not otherwise fastened;[r] picking open a lock with a false key; putting back the lock of a door, or the fastening of a window, with an instrument; lowering a window fastened only by a wedge or weight;[s] turning the key when the door is locked on the inside, or unloosening any other fastening which the owner has provided; lifting a trap door;[t] are several instances of actual breaking.[u] Constructive breakings occur when the burglar gains an entry by fraud;[v] by conspiracy; or threats.[w] The breaking of an inner door of the house will be sufficient to constitute a burglary.[x] And even the least entry, with the whole or any part of the body, hand, or foot, or with any instrument or weapon introduced for the purpose of committing a felony, will be sufficient to constitute the offence.[y] But the introduction of an instrument in the act of breaking the house will not be sufficient entry, unless it be introduced for the purpose of committing a felony.[z] The whole physical frame need not pass within.[x]

3. To be burglary, it must, in general, be committed in a mansion or dwelling-house, actually occupied as a dwelling; but if it be left by the owner with an intention of returning, though no person resides in it in his absence, it is still his mansion or residence.[a] But burglary may be committed in a church at common law,[b] or in a store, warehouse, barn, vessel, or railway coach or car. It must be in the dwelling, etc., of another person.[c]

4. To be burglary, the offence must be committed in the night; for in daytime there can be no burglary.[d] For this purpose it is deemed night, when by the light of the sun a person cannot clearly discern the face or countenance of another.[e] This rule does not apply to moonlight.[f] The breaking and entering need not be done the same night,[g] but it is necessary the breaking and entering should be in the night-time; for if the breaking be in daylight, and the entering be in the night, or vice versa, it will not be burglary.[h]

CALENDAR is a record containing a list of prisoners, their names, the time when they were committed, and by whom, and the cause and time of their commitments.

CARNAL KNOWLEDGE is sexual connection; this term is generally, if not exclusively, applied to the act of the male. The term "carnally knew," is a technical phrase essential in an indictment to charge the defendant with the crime of rape. No other words, nor circumlocution will answer,[i] their omission renders the indictment bad on demurrer, but is cured by a verdict.[j]

CARRYING AWAY is such a removal of, or taking into possession, personal property as is required in order to constitute the crime of larceny. Any removal, however slight, of the entire article, which is not attached either to the soil or to any other thing not removed, is sufficient,[k] thus, to snatch a diamond from a lady's ear, which is instantly dropped among the curls of her hair;[l] to remove sheets from a bed and carry them into an adjoining room;[m] to take plate from a trunk, and lay it on the floor with intent to carry it away;[n] to remove a package from one part of a wagon to another, with a view to steal it;[o] have respectively been holden to be felonies. But nothing less than such a severance will be sufficient.[p]

CASTRATION is the act of gelding. When this act is maliciously performed upon a man, it is a mayhem, and punishable as such, although the sufferer consented to it;[q] the punishment is, generally, fine and imprisonment. By the ancient law of England the crime was punished by retaliation—member for member.[r] By the civil law the punishment was by death.[s] The consequences of castration, when complete, are impotence and sterility.[t]

CHALLENGE is a request by one person to another to fight a duel. It may be oral or written.[u] Sending a challenge is a high offence at common law, and indictable as tending to a breach of the peace.[v] He who carries a challenge is also punishable by indictment.[w] In most States this practice is punishable by special laws.[x]

CHANCE-MEDLEY is a sudden affray; this word is sometimes applied to any kind of homicide by misadventure, but in strictness is applicable to such killing only as happens in defending one's self.[y]

CHARACTER. See title EVIDENCE, ante.

CHARGE. See ACCUSATION; BILL OF INDICTMENT, above.

CHASTITY is that virtue which prevents the unlawful commerce of the sexes. Sending a letter to a married woman, soliciting her to commit adultery, is an indictable offence.[z] Solicitation of chastity is in some States an indictable offence. Words charging a woman with a violation of chastity are actionable in themselves, because they charge her with a crime punishable by law, and of a character calculated to degrade, disgrace, and exclude her from society.[a] A woman may defend her chastity by killing her assailant. See SELF-DEFENCE, below.

CHEAT is deceitful practices in defrauding or endeavoring to defraud another of his known right, by some wilful device, contrary to the plain rules of common honesty.[b] It is the fraudulent obtaining of the property of another by any deceitful and illegal practice or token (short of felony) which affects or may affect the public. In order to constitute a cheat or indictable fraud, there must be a prejudice or injury received; and such injury must affect the public welfare, or have a tendency so to do.[c] A cheat, in order to be indictable at common law, must have been probable in its nature, by being calculated to defraud numbers, or to deceive or injure the public in general, or by affecting the public trade or revenue, the public health, or being in fraud of public justice, etc. And yet cheats, apparently private, have been held to be indictable at common law, it appearing upon examination to involve considerations of a public nature, or founded in conspiracy or by forgery. Thus, it is not (unless so provided by statute) indictable for a man to obtain goods by false verbal representations of his credit in society, and of his ability to pay for them,[d] or to violate his contract, however fraudulently it be broken,[e] or fraudulently to deliver a less quantity of amber than was contracted for and represented,[f] or to receive good barley to grind, and to return instead a musty mixture of barley and oatmeal.[g]

To cheat a man of his money or goods, by using false weights or false measures, has been indictable at common law from time immemorial.[h]

COERCION. Direct or positive coercion takes place when a man is by physical force compelled to do an act contrary to his will. Implied coercion exists where a person is legally under subjection to another, and is induced in consequence of such subjection to do an act contrary to his will.

As will is necessary to the commission of a crime, or the making of a contract, a person coerced into either has no will on the subject, and is not responsible.[i] The command of a superior to an inferior,[j] of a parent to a child,[k] or a master to his servant, or a principal to his agent,[l] may amount to coercion.

As to persons acting under the constraint of superior power, and, therefore, not criminally amenable, the principal case is that of a married woman, with respect to whom the law recognizes certain presumptions: thus, if a wife commits a felony, other than treason or homicide, or, perhaps, highway robbery, in company with her husband, the law presumes that she acted under his coercion, and, consequently, without any guilty intent, unless the fact of non-coercion is distinctly proved.[m] This presumption appears, on some occasions, to have been conclusive, and is still practically regarded in no very different light, especially where the crime is of a flagrant character; but the better opinion seems to be that in every case the presumption may be rebutted by positive proof that the woman acted as a free agent.[x] And a married woman cannot be convicted under any circumstances as a receiver of stolen goods, when the property has been taken by her husband, and given to her by him.[n]

Whether the doctrine of coercion extends to any misdemeanor may admit of some doubt; but the better opinion seems to be that, provided the misdemeanor is of a serious nature, as, for example, the uttering of base coin, the wife will be protected in like manner as in cases of felony; although it has been distinctly held that the protection does not extend to assaults and batteries, or to the offence of keeping a brothel.[o] It is probable that in all inferior misdemeanors this presumption, if admitted at all, would be held liable to be defeated by far less stringent evidence of the wife's active co-operation than would suffice in cases of felony.[p] For the law upon the responsibility of married women for crime.[x]

COMMON SCOLD is one who by practice of frequent scolding disturbs the neighborhood.[q] The offence of being a common scold is cognizable at common law. It is a particular form of nuisance, and was punishable by the ducking-stool at common law; but this punishment is substituted by fine and imprisonment.[r]

COMPLAINT is an accusation made to a proper officer that some person, whether known or unknown, has been guilty of a designated offence, with an offer to prove the fact, and a request that the offender may be punished. It is also a technical term, descriptive of proceedings before a magistrate.[s] To have a legal effect the complaint must be supported by such evidence as shows that an offence has been committed, and renders it certain or probable that it was committed by the person named or described in the complaint.

The general and specific requisites of a complaint are stated at length under the title ACCUSATION, above. See EXAMINATION, below.

COMPOUNDING A FELONY is the act of the party immediately aggrieved, or of the officer in charge of the prosecution, who agrees with the thief or other felon that he will not prosecute him, on condition that he return to him the goods stolen, or who takes a reward not to prosecute. This is an offence punishable by fine or imprisonment, or both, and at common law rendered the person committing it an accessory.[t] A failure to prosecute for an assault with an intent to kill is not compounding a felony.[u] The accepting of a promissory note, signed by a party guilty of a larceny, as a consideration for not prosecuting, is sufficient to constitute the offence.[v] The mere retaking by the owner of stolen goods is no offence, unless the offender is not to be prosecuted.[w]

The compounding a felony is an indictable offence, and no action can be supported in any contract of which such offence is the consideration in whole or in part.[x]

COMPOUNDING OF MISDEMEANORS is also a perversion or defeating of public justice, and is in like manner an indictable offence at common law.[x] But the law will permit a compromise of any offence, though made the subject of a criminal prosecution, for which the injured party might recover damages in a civil action. But if the offence is of a public nature, no agreement can be valid that is founded on the consideration of stifling a prosecution for it.[y] A receipt in full of all demands given on consideration of stifling a criminal prosecution is void.[z]

CONFEDERACY is an agreement between two or more persons to do an unlawful act, or an act which, though not unlawful in itself, becomes so by the confederacy. The technical term usually employed to signify this offence is conspiracy.

CONFESSION. See title EVIDENCE, ante.

CONSPIRACY is a combination of two or more persons by some concerted action to accomplish some criminal or unlawful purpose, or to accomplish some purpose, not in itself criminal or unlawful, by criminal or unlawful means.[a] The terms "criminal" and "unlawful" are used because it is manifest that many acts are unlawful which are not punishable by indictment or other public prosecution, and yet there is no doubt that a combination by numbers to do them is an unlawful conspiracy, and punishable by indictment.[b] Of this character was a conspiracy to cheat by false pretences without false tokens, when a cheat by false pretences only, by a single person, was not a punishable offence.[c] So a combination to destroy the reputation of an individual by verbal calumny, which is not indictable.[d] So, a conspiracy to induce and persuade a young female, by false pretensions, to leave the protection of her parents' house, with a view to facilitate her prostitution.[e] So, a conspiracy by false and fraudulent representations that a horse bought by one of the defendants from the prosecutor was unsound, to induce him to accept a less sum for the horse than the agreed price.[f] So, a conspiracy by traders to dispose of their goods in contemplation of bankruptcy, with intent to defraud their creditors.[g]

A combination to go into a theatre to hiss an actor;[h] to indict for the purpose of extorting money;[i] to charge a person with being the father of a bastard child;[j] to coerce journeymen to demand a higher rate of wages;[k] to charge a person with poisoning another;[l] to effect the price of public stocks by false rumors;[m] to prevent competition at an auction;[n] have each been held indictable.

In order to render the offence complete, it is not necessary that any act should be done in pursuance of the unlawful agreement entered into between the parties, or that any one should have been defrauded or injured by it; the conspiracy is the gist of the crime.[o]

A wilful and corrupt conspiracy to cast away, burn, or otherwise destroy any ship or vessel, with intent to injure any underwriter thereon, or the goods on board thereof, or any lender of money on such vessel on bottomry or respondentia, is a felony, and the offender punishable by fine, not exceeding ten thousand dollars, and by imprisonment and confinement at hard labor not exceeding ten years.[p]

CONTAGIOUS DISORDERS are those diseases which are capable of being transmitted by mediate or immediate contact. Persons sick of such disorders may remain in their own houses,[q] but are indictable for exposing themselves in a public place, endangering the public.[r] Nuisances which produce such diseases may be abated.[s]

CONVICTION is that legal proceeding of record which ascertains the guilt of the party and upon which the sentence or judgment is founded. Summary conviction is one that takes place before an authorized magistrate or court without the intervention of a jury. Conviction must precede judgment or sentence,[t] but is not necessarily followed by it.[u] Generally, when several are charged in the same indictment, a part may be convicted and the others acquitted,[v] but not where a joint offence is charged.[w] A person cannot be convicted of part of an offence charged in an indictment, except by statute.[x] A conviction prevents a second prosecution for the same offence.[y] Summary convictions, being obtained by proceedings in derogation of the common law, must be obtained strictly in pursuance of the provisions of statute;[z] and the record must show fully that all the proper steps have been taken,[a] and especially that the court had jurisdiction.[b]

Conviction of certain crimes when accompanied by judgment disqualifies the person convicted as a witness,[c] and renders him incapable of holding any office of trust or profit.

COOL BLOOD is the condition of one who has the calm, deliberate, and undisturbed use of his reason. In cases of homicide it frequently becomes necessary to ascertain whether the act of the person killing was done in cool blood or not, in order to ascertain the degree of his guilt.[d]

COOLING TIME is the time for passion to subside and the reason to interpose. Cooling time destroys the effect of provocation, leaving homicide murder the same as if no provocation had been given.[e]

CORPUS DELICTI (the body of the offence; the essence of the crime). It is a general rule not to convict unless the corpus delicti can be established, that is, until the fact that the crime has been actually perpetrated has been first proved. Hence, on a charge of homicide the accused should not be convicted unless the death be first distinctly proved, either by direct evidence of the fact, or by inspection of the body.[f] Instances have occurred of a person being convicted of having killed another, who, after the supposed criminal has been put to death for the proposed offence, has made his appearance alive. Hence the wisdom of the rule; but it has been questioned whether, in extreme cases, it may not be competent to prove the basis of the corpus delicti by presumptive evidence.[g]

The presumption arising from the possession of the fruits of crime recently after its commission, which in all cases is one of fact, rather than of law, is occasionally so strong as to render unnecessary any direct proof of what is called the corpus delicti. Thus, if a man were to go into a wine-cellar wherein much wine was stowed, quite sober, and shortly afterwards were to be found very drunk, staggering out of such cellar, this would be reasonable evidence that the man had stolen some of the wine in the cellar, though no proof were given that any particular vat had been broached, and that any wine had actually been missed.[h]

CORRUPTION is an act committed with an intent to give some advantage inconsistent with official duty and the rights of others. It includes bribery, but is more comprehensive; because an act may be corruptly done, though the advantage to be derived from it be not offered by another.[i]

CUCKING STOOL, called also a trebucket-tumbril, and castigatory, was an engine or machine for the punishment of scolds and unquiet women. Bakers and brewers were formerly also liable to the same punishment. Being fastened to the machine, they were immersed over head and ears in some pool.[j]

CULPRIT is a person guilty, or supposed to be guilty, of a public offence.

DEAD BODY. To take up a dead body without lawful authority, even for the purpose of dissection, is a misdemeanor for which the offender might be indicted at common law.[x] This offence is, in general, punishable by statute. There can be no larceny of a dead body,[y] but may be of the clothes or shroud upon it.[z] Removing a dead body from its place of burial is an indictable offence. But when the master of a workhouse, having as such the lawful possession of the bodies of paupers who died therein, and who, therefore, was authorized by statute to permit the bodies of such paupers to undergo anatomical examination, unless to his knowledge the deceased person had expressed in his lifetime, in the manner therein mentioned, his desire to the contrary, "or unless the surviving husband or wife, or any known relative of the deceased person, should require the body to be interred without such examination," in order to prevent the relatives of the deceased paupers from making this requirement, and to lead them to believe that the bodies were buried without dissection, showed the bodies to the relatives in coffins, and caused the appearance of a funeral to be gone through, and having by this fraud prevented the relatives from making the requirement, then sold the bodies for dissection, he was held not to be indictable at common law.[a] The preventing a dead body from being interred is also an indictable offence.[b] To inter a dead body found in a river would, it seems, render the offender liable to indictment for a misdemeanor, unless he first sent for a coroner.[c] The leaving unburied the corpse of a person for whom the defendant is bound to provide Christian burial, as a wife or child, is an indictable misdemeanor, if he is shown to have been of ability to provide such burial.[d]

DECLARATIONS. See title EVIDENCE, ante.

DEFAULTING. A public officer or any other person acting in a fiduciary capacity becoming a defaulter is liable to indictment therefor.

DESERTION is an unlawful abandonment of the public service in the army or navy; the unlawful abandonment of a wife or child.

DISCRETION is the ability to know and distinguish between good and evil, between what is lawful and unlawful. The age at which children are said to have discretion is not very accurately ascertained. Under seven years it seems that no circumstances of mischievous discretion can be admitted to overthrow the strong presumption of innocence which is raised by an age so tender.[e] Between the ages of seven and fourteen, the infant is, prima facie, destitute of criminal design; but this presumption diminishes as the age increases, and even during this interval of youth may be repelled by positive evidence of vicious intention; for tenderness of years will not excuse a maturity in crime, the maxim being, "malice supplies the want of age." At fourteen children are said to have acquired legal discretion.[f]

DISORDERLY HOUSE is a house the inmates of which behave so badly as to become a nuisance to the neighborhood. The keeper of such a house may be indicted for maintaining a public nuisance.[x]

DISORDERLY PERSONS. See GENERAL STATUTES.

DISSUADING a witness from giving evidence against a person indicted is an indictable offence at common law.[g] The mere attempt to stifle evidence is also criminal, although the person should not succeed, on the general principle that an incitement to commit a crime is in itself criminal.[h]

DUELLING is the fighting of two persons, one against the other, at an appointed time and place, upon a precedent quarrel. It differs from an affray in this: that the latter occurs on a sudden quarrel, while the former is always the result of design. When one of the parties is killed, the survivor is guilty of murder.[i] Fighting a duel, even where there is no fatal result, is of itself a misdemeanor;[j] by statute in many States a felony.

EAVESDROPPERS are such persons as wait under walls or windows, or the eaves of a house, to listen to the discourses within and thereupon to frame mischievous tales. The common law punishment for this offence is fine and a finding of sureties for good behavior.[k]

ELECTION. See PRACTICE.

EMBEZZLEMENT is the fraudulently removing and secreting of personal property, with which the party has been intrusted, for the purpose of applying it to his own use. The principles of the common law not being found adequate to protect general owners against the fraudulent conversion of property by persons standing in certain fiduciary relations to those who were the subject of their peculations, certain statutes have been enacted creating new criminal offences, and annexing to them their proper punishment. A taking is requisite to constitute a larceny; an embezzlement is in substance and essentially a larceny, aggravated rather than palliated by the violation of a trust or contract, instead of being, like larceny, a trespass. The administration of the common law has been not a little embarrassed in discriminating the two offences. But they are so far distinct in their character that, under an indictment charging merely a larceny, evidence of embezzlement is not sufficient to authorize a conviction; and in cases of embezzlement the proper mode is to allege sufficient matter in the indictment to apprize the defendant that the charge is for embezzlement. Although the statutes declare that a party shall be deemed to have committed the crime of simple larceny; yet it is a larceny of a peculiar character, and must be set forth in its requisite and distinctive character.[l]

When embezzlement of a part of the cargo takes place on board of a ship, either from the fault, fraud, connivance, or negligence of any of the crew, they are bound to contribute to the reparation of the loss in proportion to their wages. When the embezzlement is fixed on any individual, he is solely responsible; when it is made by the crew, or some of the crew, but the particular offender is unknown, and, from circumstances of the case, strong presumptions of guilt apply to the whole crew, all must contribute. The presumption of innocence is always in favor of the crew, and the guilt of the parties must be established beyond all reasonable doubt before they can be required to contribute.[m]

Embezzlement of arms, munitions, and habiliments of war, property stored in the public storehouses, letters, precious metals, and coins from the mint are prohibited by acts of Congress under severe penalties.[x]

EMBRACERY is an attempt to corrupt or influence a jury, or in any way incline them to be more favorable to one side than to the other, by money, promises, threats, or persuasions, whether the juror on whom such attempt is made give any verdict or not, or whether the verdict be true or false.[n]

ENGROSSING is buying up such large quantities of an article as to obtain a monopoly of it for the purpose of selling at an unreasonable price, especially provisions.[o] Merely buying for the purpose of selling again is not necessarily engrossing.[p]

ENTRY is the act of entering a dwelling-house, or other building, vessel, or enclosure in order to commit a crime. In cases of burglary, the least entry of the whole, or any part of the body, hand, or foot, or with any instrument, or weapon, introduced for the purpose of committing a felony, is sufficient to complete the offence.[q] It is an entry where the person descends a chimney but is arrested before he can get low enough to enter any room; it is an entry to open a window entirely, but not to push it up or down when partly opened; putting a finger or pistol over a threshold is an entry, but not a centre-bit or crowbar, these instruments being intended for breaking, and not for committing a felony. It is not necessary in all cases to show an actual entry by all the prisoners, there may be a constructive entry as well as a constructive breaking. A., B., and C. come in the night, by consent, to break and enter the house of D., to commit a felony; A. only actually breaks and enters the house; B. stands near the door, but does not actually enter; C. stands at the lane's end, or orchard gate, or field gate, or the like, to watch that no help come to aid the owner, or to give notice to the others if help comes; this is burglary in all, and all are principals though one only did actually enter.[r] See BURGLARY, above.

ESCAPE is the departure of a prisoner from custody before he is discharged by due course of law. It is the voluntarily or negligently allowing any person lawfully in confinement to leave the place.[s] The deliverance of a person who is lawfully imprisoned out of prison before such person is entitled to such deliverance by law.[t] Escape takes place without force; prison breach, with violence; rescue through the intervention of third parties. Actual escape takes place when the prisoner in fact gets out of the prison and unlawfully regains his liberty.

Constructive escape takes place when the prisoner obtains more liberty than the law allows, although he still remains in confinement.[t] Negligent escape takes place when the prisoner goes at large, unlawfully, either because the building or prison in which he is confined is too weak to hold him, or because the keeper by carelessness lets him go out of prison. Voluntary escape takes place when the prisoner has given to him voluntarily any liberty not authorized by law.[u]

When a man is imprisoned in a proper place under the process of a court having jurisdiction in the case, he is lawfully imprisoned, notwithstanding the proceedings may be irregular;[v] but if the court has not jurisdiction the imprisonment is unlawful, whether the process be regular or otherwise.[x] Letting a prisoner, confined under final process, out of prison for any, even the shortest time, is an escape, although he afterwards return;[w] and this may (as in case of imprisonment under the civil writ of capias ad satisfaciendum), although an officer may accompany him.[x] In criminal cases the prisoner is indictable for a misdemeanor, whether the escape be negligent or voluntary;[y] and the officer is also indictable.[z] If the offence of the prisoner was a felony, a voluntary escape is a felony on the part of the officer;[a] if negligent, it is a misdemeanor only in any case.[b] Nothing but an act of God, or the enemies of the country, will excuse an escape.[c] It is the duty of the officer to rearrest after an escape.[d] See GENERAL STATUTES.

EXACTION is a wilful wrong done by an officer, or by one who, under color of his office, takes more fee or pay for his services than the law allows. Between extortion and exaction there is this difference, that in the former case the officer extorts more than his due where something is due to him; in the latter, he exacts what is not his due, when there is nothing due to him.[e]

EXAMINATION; PRELIMINARY EXAMINATION. See title EVIDENCE, "Examination," ante.

EXCUSABLE HOMICIDE is the killing of a human being when the party killing is not altogether free from blame, but the necessity which renders it excusable may be said to have been partly induced by his own act.[f]

EXECUTION is the putting of a convict to death in pursuance of his sentence. "Whenever any person is condemned to suffer death by hanging, for any crime of which he shall have been convicted, the punishment is generally inflicted within the walls or yard of the jail of the county in which he is convicted; and the sheriff or coroner of the said county attends such execution, to which he invites the presence of a physician, the prosecuting attorney of the county, and twelve reputable citizens, selected by himself; and the sheriff, at the request of the criminal, permits such ministers of the gospel, not exceeding two, as he may name, and any of his immediate relatives, to attend and be present at the execution, together with such officers of the prison, and such of the sheriff's deputies as the sheriff or coroner, in his discretion, may think it expedient to have present." No person under age is permitted, on any account, to witness the execution.

EXPOSURE OF PERSON is such an intentional exposure, in a public place, of the naked body as is calculated to shock the feelings of chastity or to corrupt the morals. This offence is indictable on the ground that every public show and exhibition which outrages decency, shocks humanity, or is contrary to good morals, is punishable at common law.[g] An indecent exposure, though in a place of public resort, if visible by only one person, is not indictable as a common nuisance. An omnibus is a public place sufficient to support an indictment.[h]

EXTENUATION is that which renders a crime or wrong less heinous than it would appear or be without it; it is opposed to aggravation. In general, extenuating circumstances go in mitigation of punishment in criminal cases, or of damages in those of a civil nature.

EXTORTION is the unlawful taking by an officer, by color of his office, of any money or thing of value that is not due to him, or more than is due, or before it is due.[i] To constitute extortion, there must be the receipt of money or something of value; the taking of a promissory note which is void, is not sufficient to make an extortion.[j] It is an extortion and oppression for an officer to take money for the performance of his duty, even though it be in the exercise of a discretionary power.[k]

EXTRADITION; see FUGITIVE FROM JUSTICE, below.

FALSE PRETENCES are false representations and statements, made with a fraudulent design to obtain "money, goods, wares, and merchandise," with intent to cheat.[l] It is a representation of some fact or circumstance, calculated to mislead, which is not true.[m] The pretence must relate to past events. Any representation or assurance in relation to a future transaction may be a promise, or a covenant, or warranty, but cannot amount to a statutory false pretence.[n] It must be such as to impose upon a person of ordinary strength of mind;[o] and this will doubtless be sufficient.[p] But although it may be difficult to restrain false pretences to such as an ordinarily prudent man may avoid, yet it is not every absurd or irrational pretence which will be sufficient.[q] It is not necessary that all the pretences should be false, if one of them, by itself, is sufficient to constitute the offence.[r] And although other circumstances may have induced the credit, or the delivery of the property, yet it will be sufficient if the false pretences had such an influence that without them the credit would not have been given, or the property delivered.[s] The false pretences must have been used before the contract was completed.[t] There must be an intent to cheat or defraud some person.[u] This may be inferred from the false representation.[x] The intent is all that is requisite; it is not necessary that the party defrauded should sustain any loss.[v]

This offence is modified in the different States by the wording of the statutes, which vary from each other slightly. The interpretation of the words "by any false pretence" in such statutes is, that wherever a person fraudulently represents as an existing fact that which is not an existing fact, and so gets money, etc., he is guilty of the offence embraced in the statute.[w]

FALSIFY. The alteration or making false a record is punishable at common law and by statute, both State and federal.[x]

FEAR is an emotion excited by an expectation of evil or apprehension of danger. Anxiety, dread, solicitude. Fear in a person robbed is one of the ingredients required to constitute a robbing from the person, and without this the felonious taking of property is a larceny. It is not necessary that the owner of the property should be in fear of his own person; but fear of violence to the person of his child,[y] or to his property[z] is sufficient.[a]

FELONIES are offences punishable by death, or imprisonment in the State prison or penitentiary. They are offences of great gravity. At the common law it occasioned a total forfeiture of lands or goods, or both, to which capital or other punishment was superadded, according to the degree of guilt.[b] It is clearly defined by the statutes of most States.

See ARREST WITHOUT PROCESS, above.

FINES are pecuniary punishments imposed by a lawful tribunal upon a person convicted of a criminal offence. The amount of the fine is generally left to the discretion of the court. To prevent the abuse of power to fine, the Constitution of the United States directs that "excessive bail shall not be required, nor excessive fines imposed, nor cruel and unusual punishment inflicted."[x] When, therefore, the offence committed, for which the penalty is by statute excessive or cruel, the court will pronounce a nominal sentence only, for the law will not suffer cruelty, but tempers its punishment with reason and justice.

FLIGHT is the evading of the course of justice by a man's voluntarily withdrawing,[c] and this, though the withdrawal be for an hour, a day, a week, etc.

FORESTALLING THE MARKET is the buying of victuals on their way to market before they reach it, with the intent to sell again at a higher price.[d] It is every device or practice by act, conspiracy, words, or news, to enhance the price of victuals or other provisions.[e] These acts must be in themselves an unlawful, unreasonable, unconscionable, and prohibited by statute, for a legitimate purchase in the ordinary course of trade, to sell again at reasonable and usual prices, is at all times lawful.

FORFEITURE is a punishment annexed by law to some illegal act or negligence. It is a sum of money paid by way of penalty for a crime.[f]

FORGERY is falsely making or materially altering, with intent to defraud, any writing which, if genuine, might apparently be of legal efficacy or the foundation of a legal liability.[g] The fraudulent making and alteration of a writing to the prejudice of another man's right.[h]

The intent must be to defraud another; but it is not requisite that any one should have been injured: it is sufficient that the instrument forged might have proved prejudicial.[i] Most States have passed laws making certain acts to be forgery, and the national legislature has also enacted several on this subject, which are here referred to; but these statutes do not take away the character of the offence as a misdemeanor at common law, but only provide additional punishment in the cases particularly enumerated in the statutes.[j]

The making of a whole written instrument in the name of another with a fraudulent intent is a sufficient making; but a fraudulent insertion, alteration, or erasure, even of a letter, in any material part of the instrument, whereby a new operation is given to it, will amount to a

Law, § 432, has collected seven definitions of forgery, and justly remarks that the books abound in definitions. forgery,[k] and this, although it be afterwards executed by a person ignorant of the deceit.[l] The fraudulent application of a true signature to a false instrument for which it was not intended, or vice versa, will also be a forgery.[m] For example, it is forgery in an individual who is requested to draw a will for a sick person in a particular way, instead of doing so, to insert legacies of his own head, and then procure the signature of such sick person to be affixed to the paper without revealing to him the legacies thus fraudulently inserted.[n] A party who makes a copy of a receipt and adds to such copy material words not in the original, and then offers it in evidence on the ground that the original has been lost, may be prosecuted for forgery.[o] It is a sufficient making where, in the writing, the party assumes the name and character of a person in existence.[p] But the adoption of a false description and addition where a false name is not assumed and there is no person answering the description, is not a forgery.[q] Making an instrument in a fictitious name, or the name of a non-existing person, is as much a forgery as making it in the name of an existing person,[r] and although a man may make the instrument in his own name, if he represent it as the instrument of another of the same name, when in fact there is no such person, it will be a forgery in the name of a non-existing person.[s] But the correctness of this decision has been doubted.[x] Though, in general, a party cannot be guilty of forgery by a mere non-feasance, yet if in drawing a will he should fraudulently omit a legacy which he had been directed to insert, and by the omission of such bequest it would cause a material alteration in the limitation of a bequest to another, as, where the omission of a devise of an estate for life to one causes a devise of the same lands to another to pass a present estate which would otherwise have passed a remainder only, it would be a forgery.[t]

With regard to the thing forged, it may be observed that it has been holden to be forgery at common law fraudulently to falsify or falsely make records and other matters of a public nature,[x] a parish register,[u] a letter in the name of a magistrate, or of the governor of a gaol directing the discharge of a prisoner.[v] With regard to private writings, forgery may be committed of any writing which, if genuine, would operate as the foundation of another man's liability or the evidence of his right,[w] as, a letter of recommendation of a person as a man of property and pecuniary responsibility,[x] an acceptance of a conditional order for the delivery of goods,[y] a false testimonial to character,[z] a railway-pass,[a] a railroad-ticket,[c] or fraudulently to testify or falsely to make a deed or will.[d] Forgery may be of a printed or engraved as well as of a written instrument.[e] A forgery must be of some document or writing: therefore the printing an artist's name in the corner of a picture, in order falsely to pass it off as an original picture by that artist, is not a forgery.[f]

FORNICATION is unlawful carnal knowledge by an unmarried person of another, whether the latter be married or unmarried. Fornication is distinguished from adultery from the fact that the guilty party is not married. Four cases of unlawful intercourse may arise: 1. Where both parties are married. 2. Where the man only is married. 3. Where the woman only is married. 4. Where neither is married. In the first case such intercourse must be adultery; in the second case the crime is fornication only on the part of the woman, but adultery on the part of the man; in the third case it is adultery in the woman and fornication (by statute in some States adultery) in the man; in the last case it is fornication only in both parties. By the statutes of many of the States fornication is an indictable offence by statute;[g] and where it is there may be a conviction for this offence on an indictment for adultery.[h]

FRAUD includes all deceitful practices in defrauding or endeavoring to defraud another of his known right by means of some artful device, contrary to the plain rules of common honesty. In considering fraud in its criminal aspect it is difficult to determine whether facts in evidence constitute a fraud, or amount to a felony. In general, if the property obtained, whether by means of a false token or false pretence, be parted with, absolutely, by the owner it is a fraud; but if the possession only be parted with, and that possession be obtained by fraud, it will be felony.[i] Examples of gross frauds are: uttering a fictitious bank bill;[j] selling unwholesome provisions;[k] malpractice of a physician;[l] rendering false accounts, and other frauds, by persons in official situations;[m] fabrication of news tending to the public injury;[n] cheats by means of false weights and measures;[o] and generally, the fraudulent obtaining the property of another by any deceitful or illegal practice or token (short of felony) which affects or may affect the public,[p] as with the common cases of obtaining property under false pretences.

FUGITIVES FROM JUSTICE are those who, having committed crime, flee from the jurisdiction within which the offence was committed to escape punishment. As one State cannot pursue those who violate its laws into the territories of another, and as it concerns all that those guilty of the more atrocious crimes should not go unpunished, the practice prevails among the more enlightened nations of mutually surrendering such fugitives to the justice of the injured State. This practice is founded on national comity and convenience, or on express compact. The United States recognizes the obligation only when it is created by express agreement, and have contracted this obligation with several foreign States by treaty, and with one another by their federal constitution and laws.

The various treaties with foreign powers enumerate the crimes for which persons may be surrendered, and limit in other particulars their application. Before any person can be surrendered a demand for him must be made upon the executive by the executive power of the State whose laws have been violated. It is usual to make this demand before judicial proceedings are instituted for the arrest of the fugitive;[o] but this is not required by act of Congress.[p] The usual method of action is for some police officer or other special agent, after obtaining the proper papers in his own country, to repair to the foreign country, carry the case through with the aid of his minister, receive the fugitive, and conduct him back to the country having jurisdiction of the crime.[q] The expense of the apprehension must be borne and defrayed by the party making the requisition.

Under the United States Constitution and laws, etc.

"A person charged in any State with treason, felony, or other crime, who shall flee from justice and be found in another State, shall, on demand of the executive authority of the State from which he fled, be delivered up, and to be removed to the State having jurisdiction of the crime."[r] On demand of the executive authority of a State, and production of a copy of the indictment found, or an affidavit made before a magistrate charging the person demanded with treason, felony, or other crime certified as authentic by the governor or chief magistrate of the State from whence the person so charged fled, that the executive authority of the State or Territory to which such person shall have fled shall cause the person charged to be arrested and secured, and notice of the arrest to be given to the executive authority making such demand, or to the agent of such authority appointed to receive the fugitive, and cause the fugitive to be delivered to such agent when he shall appear; but if such agent do not appear within six minutes, the prisoner shall be discharged.[s]

The treason, felony, or other crime, extends to and embraces all acts which by the laws of where they were committed are made criminal.[t] The accusation must be in the form of an affidavit, or indictment found and duly authenticated. If by affidavit, it should be sufficiently full to justify arrest and commitment for hearing.[u] The accused must have fled from the State in which the crime was committed; and of this the executive authority of the State upon which the demand is made should be reasonably satisfied. This is sometimes done by affidavit. In the absence of direct evidence on the question of flight, if it appear from the indictment or affidavit produced that the crime charged is atrocious in its nature, and recently committed, and the prosecution promptly instituted, the unexplained presence of the accused in another State immediately after the commission of the crime may be regarded as prima facie evidence of flight, sufficient at least to warrant an order of arrest. The order of surrender is not required, by act of Congress, to be made at the same time with the order of arrest, and time, therefore, can be taken in doubtful cases, after the accused is arrested, to hear proofs to establish or rebut such prima facie evidence.[v]

The surrender of the accused must be made to an agent of the executive authority of the demanding State, duly appointed to receive the fugitive. The proceedings of the executive authority are subject to be reviewed on habeas corpus by the judicial power, and if found void the prisoner may be discharged.[w]

Any person setting at liberty or rescuing a fugitive from an agent while transporting a fugitive to the State or Territory from which he fled is liable to a fine of five hundred dollars and imprisonment not exceeding one year.[x]

GAME LAWS. See GENERAL STATUTES.

GAMING is an agreement between two or more persons to play by certain rules at cards, dice, or other contrivance that the result shall determine the owner of the amount staked, contributed, or wagered upon the game. In general, at common law, all games are lawful, unless some fraud has been practised, or such games are contrary to public policy. Each of the parties to the contract must have a right to the money or thing played for. He must have given his full and free consent, and not have been entrapped by fraud. There must be equality in the play. The play must be conducted fairly. But even when all these rules have been observed, the courts will not countenance gaming by giving too easy a remedy for the recovery of money won at play.[y] But where fraud has been practised, as in all other cases, the contract is void; and in some cases when the party has been guilty of cheating, by playing with false dice, cards, and the like, he may be indicted at common law, and fined and imprisoned, according to the heinousness of the offence.[a]

For the laws forbidding gaming, see the GENERAL STATUTES.

GAMING HOUSES are houses kept for the purpose of permitting persons to gamble for money or other valuable things. They are nuisances in the eye of the law, being detrimental to the public, as they promote cheating and other corrupt practices.[a]

GAOL. See JAIL; PRISON, below.

GOOD BEHAVIOR. Surety for good behavior may be demanded from any person who is justly suspected, upon sufficient grounds, of intending to commit a crime or misdemeanor. Surety for good behavior is somewhat similar to surety of the peace, but the recognizance is more easily forfeited, and it ought to be demanded with greater caution.[b]

GOODS AND CHATTELS. Choses in action, as bank notes, mortgage deeds, and money, do not fall within the technical definition of "goods and chattels;" and if described in an indictment as goods and chattels, these words may be rejected as surplusage.[c]

GRAND LARCENY. Simple larceny is divided into grand larceny and petit larceny. Grand larceny is made a felony in most States, while petit larceny is made a misdemeanor—the former embraces larcenies from a prescribed minimum (e. g. five dollars in value) to any amount in value, however great; the latter is any amount in value less than the prescribed maximum (e. g. five dollars in value).

GRAVE. The violation of the grave, by taking up a dead body, or stealing the coffin or grave clothes, is a misdemeanor at common law.[d] Penalties for violation of the grave, desecration of cemeteries, etc., are exacted in most of the States.

See DEAD BODY, above.

GUILT is criminality; offence; liability to punishment; it is opposed to innocence. In general, every one is presumed innocent until guilt has been proved; but in some cases the presumption of guilt overthrows that of innocence; as, for example, where a party destroys evidence to which the opposite party is entitled. The spoliation of papers material to show the neutral character of a vessel furnishes strong presumption against the neutrality of the ship.[e]

HARD LABOR is, in general, a part of the sentence of convicts in States where the penitentiary system has been adopted. This labor is such as is ordinarily performed voluntarily by laborers and mechanics, and is generally of the same character. It may be any of the common industries, such as the working of wood, metals, weaving, quarrying, and the like employments.

HOMICIDE is the killing of a human being,[x] by human agency.[f] Excusable homicide takes place under such circumstances of accident or necessity that the party cannot strictly be said to have committed the act wilfully and intentionally, and whereby he is relieved from the penalty annexed to the commission of a felonious homicide. Felonious homicide is that committed wilfully under such circumstances as to render it punishable. Justifiable homicide is that committed with full intent, but under such circumstances as to render the act one proper to be performed. The distinction between justifiable and excusable homicide is that in the former the killing takes place without any manner of fault on the part of the slayer; in the latter there is some slight fault; between justifiable or excusable and felonious homicide there is a great and important distinction. For example: "If a person driving a carriage happen to kill another, if he saw or had timely notice of the mischief likely to ensue, and yet wilfully drove on, it would be murder; if he might have seen the danger, but did not look before him, it will be manslaughter; but if the accident happened in such a manner that no want of due care could be imputed to the driver, it will be accidental death and excusable homicide."[g]

To constitute the offence of homicide there must be a person in actual existence;[h] but the destruction of human life at any period after birth is homicide, however near it may be to extinction from any other cause.[i] The person killed, to constitute the homicide felonious, must have been entitled to his existence. Thus, a soldier of the enemy in time of war has no right to life, but may be killed. A criminal sentenced to death has no right to life; but no person can take life but the authorized officer, and in the manner prescribed by law.

See MURDER; MANSLAUGHTER; SELF-DEFENCE.

HOUSE OF CORRECTION is an asylum or prison for incorrigibles or those who have committed minor crimes.

HOUSE OF ILL-FAME is a house resorted to for the purpose of prostitution and lewdness.[j] Keeping a house of ill-fame is an offence at common law.[k] So, the letting of a house to a woman of ill-fame, knowing her to be such, with the intent that it shall be let for purposes of prostitution, is an indictable offence at common law.[l] If a lodger lets her room for the HOUSE OF REFUGE is an asylum or prison for juvenile delinquents.

HOUSEBREAKING is the breaking and entering the dwelling-house of another by night or by day, with intent to commit some felony within the same, whether such felonious intent is executed or not. Housebreaking by night is burglary. This crime is of a local character and the evidence respecting the place must correspond with the allegation in the indictment.

IMPEACHMENT is a written accusation by the State or federal house of representatives to the senate thereof against a State or federal officer. The cause for, mode of, and trial of impeachments is provided for by both State and federal constitutions.

INCEST is cohabitation or sexual commerce between persons related within the degrees wherein marriage is prohibited by the law.[p] It is punished by fine or imprisonment, or both, in the respective States.

INDECENCY is that which is unfit to be seen, offensive to modesty and delicacy.[q] The exposure by a man of his naked person on a balcony to public view, or bathing in public,[r] or the exhibition of bawdy pictures,[s] are examples of indecency. Such indecencies are punishable by indictment.

INDICTMENT is a written accusation or formal charge of a crime or misdemeanor preferred to a court by a lawfully constituted grand jury under oath.[t] The essential requisites of a valid indictment are: 1. That the indictment be presented to some court having jurisdiction of the offence stated therein. 2. That it appear to have been found by the grand jury of the proper county or district. 3. That it be found a true bill, and signed by the foreman of the grand jury, and when required by law the prosecuting attorney. 4. That it be framed with sufficient certainty, containing a description of the crime or misdemeanor charged, and of facts constituting the offence. Where the offence is created by statute, a description in the terms of the statute is sufficient. 5. It must be in the English language. But any document in a foreign language, as a libel, may be set out in the original tongue, and then the translation showing its application.[u] The formal requisites of an indictment are: 1. The name, which, at common law, should always be laid in the county where the offence has been committed, although the charge be in its nature transitory, as a battery.[v] The venue is stated in the margin (i. e., at the beginning), thus: State of ——, county of ——, ss., or city and county of ——, to wit. See title AFFIDAVITS, ante.[w] 2. The presentment, which must be in the present tense, and is usually expressed as follows: "The grand jury of the State (or commonwealth) of ——, inquiring in and for the (city and) county of ——, aforesaid, upon their oaths and affirmations, present." 3. The name of the defendant. 4. The time when the offence was committed. 5. The place where the offence was committed. 6. The offence must be sufficiently described. If the offence be statutory, a description in the terms of the statute is sufficient. See ACCUSATION, above.

INDUCEMENT. See CONFESSIONS.

INFORMATION is in the nature of an indictment, with this exception: it is preferred by the attorney of the State instead of by a grand jury. The prosecuting witness or witnesses make oath in writing that a public offence has been committed, naming the accused, and stating the time and place of its commission. Upon this affidavit the prosecuting attorney bases his information—returning both affidavit and information to court.

See ACCUSATION, "Indictment," above.

INTENTION is aim, design, determination, or purpose. To render an act criminal, a wrongful intent must exist.[x] And this must be combined with a wrongful act; as mere intent is not punishable,[y] but a wrongful intent may render an act otherwise innocent criminal.[z]

Generally, where any wrongful act is committed, the law will infer conclusively that it was intentionally committed,[a] and also that the natural, necessary, and even probable consequences were intended.[b]

Where by the common law or by the provision of a statute, a particular intention is essential to an offence, or a criminal act is attempted but not accomplished, and the evil intent only can be punished, it is necessary to allege the intent with distinctness and precision, and to support the allegations with proof. On the other hand, if the offence does not rest merely in tendency or in attempt to do a certain act with a wicked purpose, but consists in doing an unlawful or criminal act, the evil intention will be presumed, and need not be alleged, or, if alleged, it is a mere formal averment which need not be proved.[e]

Proof of intention may be of external and visible acts and conduct from which the jury may infer the fact,[f] or it may be by proof of an act committed; as in the case of burglary with intent to steal; proof of burglary and stealing is conclusive.[g]

When a man intending one wrong fails, and accidentally commits another, he will, except where the particular intent is a substantive part of the crime, be held to have intended the act he did commit.[h]

JAIL. COUNTY JAIL is a place provided for the confinement of persons arrested upon civil or criminal process, and held in custody of the sheriff. It is the common place of confinement for persons confined for contempt of court, witnesses, and persons without bail awaiting trial, and those convicted of lesser offences. It is generally inhabited by the sheriff or keeper and his family, and is an inhabited dwelling-house within the statutes against arson.[i]

JEOPARDY is exposure to danger, death, hazard, or injury. This is the situation of a prisoner when a trial jury is impanelled and sworn to try his case upon a valid indictment. Such a jury has been charged with his deliverance.[j] And should the prosecution be abandoned at this stage of the case, and the jury be discharged, or otherwise, the prisoner cannot be again put upon his trial by the same jurisdiction, unless this privilege be waived by the defendant.[k]

JUSTIFIABLE HOMICIDE. See HOMICIDE, above.

KIDNAPPING is the act of stealing or forcible abduction of a human being from his own home or country.[n] It includes false imprisonment.[l] A carrying away is not essential.[m] This was a capital offence by the Jewish law; and is a highly penal offence in all the States. See ABDUCTION, above.

KNOWLEDGE is the power of knowing; it is a perception of that which exists; cognizance of truth and fact; information. Many acts are perfectly innocent when the party performing them is not aware of certain circumstances attending them: for example, a man may pass a counterfeit note, and be guiltless, if he did not know it was so; he may receive stolen goods, if he were not aware of the fact that they were stolen. In these, and like cases, it is the guilty knowledge which makes the crime. Such guilty knowledge is made by the statute a constituent part of the offence; and, therefore, it must be averred and proved as such. But it is, in general, true, and may be considered as a rule almost necessary to the restraint and punishment of crimes, that when a man does that which, by the common law or by statute, is unlawful, and, in pursuing his criminal purpose, does that which constitutes another and different offence, he shall be held responsible for all the legal consequences of such criminal act. When a man, without justifiable cause, intends to wound or maim another, and in doing it, kills him, it is murder, though he had no intention to take life. But, in general, such bad motive or criminal will and purpose—that disposition of the mind and heart which is designated by the generic and significant term "malice"—is implied from the criminal act itself. But if a man does an act which would be otherwise criminal, through mistake or accident, or by force or the compulsion of others, in which his own will and mind did not instigate him to the act or concur in it, it is a matter of defence, to be averred and proved on his part, if it does not rise out of the circumstances of the case adduced on the part of the prosecution.[o]

LARCENY is the unlawful or felonious taking and carrying away by one person of the personal goods and chattels of another with intent to convert them to his own use, and without the consent of the owner.[p] Larceny is either grand or petit. See GRAND LARCENY, above. The property of the owner taken may be either general[q] or special.[r] There must be a taking against the consent of the owner,[s] and the taking will not be larceny if consent be given, though obtained by fraud.[t] When the possession of an article is intrusted to a person who carries it away and appropriates it, this is no larceny;[u] but where the custody is merely parted with, such misappropriation is a larceny.[v] The taking must be in the county where the criminal is to be tried,[w] but when the taking is in the county or State, and the thief is caught with the stolen property in another county than that where the theft was committed, he may be tried in the county where arrested with the goods; as, by construction of law, there is a fresh taking in every county in which the thief carries the stolen property.[v] There must be an actual taking away of the article,[w] but a very slight removal, if it amounts to a taking into possession, is sufficient.[x] The property must be personal,[y] and it must be of some value though but slight.[z] Things annexed to the freehold, as growing grain, grass, trees, and the like, or lead, or fixtures attached to a house, are not the subject of larceny until severed.[a] Nor can larceny be committed of things which are not the subject of property, such as the dead body of a human being. Animals of a wild nature unreclaimed, cannot be the subject of larceny, for there is no property in them absolute or qualified,[b] it is otherwise if they are reclaimed or confined.[c] And animals may be of so base a nature as not to be the subject of larceny, though tame and salable, as tame bears, cats, dogs, and monkeys.[d]

LIMITATION is a time within which an accusation may be made, or an indictment found or an information made against a person for the commission of a crime or misdemeanor. Limitation never expires during the life of the offender for treason or murder. Limitation in cases of felony varies from ten to two years; for misdemeanors or the lesser offences it is generally from two years to sixty days.

LYING IN WAIT is ambuscade for the purpose of murder. Lying in wait is evidence of premeditation, malice, intention, deliberation.

MAIM; see MAYHEM, below.

MAINTENANCE is an officious interference in a suit in which the offender has no interest, to assist one of the parties against the other, with money or advice, to prosecute or defend the action, without any authority or interest, at law.[e] It is the intermeddling of a stranger in a suit for the purpose of stirring up strife and continuing the litigation.[f] There are many acts in the nature of maintenance which become justifiable from the circumstances under which they are performed. They may be justified: 1. Because the party has an interest in the matter in variance; as, when he has a bare contingency in the lands in question, which possibly may never develop into being.[g] 2. Because the party is of kindred or affinity, as father, son; heir apparent, husband, wife, etc.[h] 3. Because the relation of landlord and tenant, master or servant, etc., subsists between the party to the suit and the person who assists him. 4. Because the money is given out of charity.[i] 5. Because the person assisting the party to the suit is an attorney or counsellor; the assistance to be rendered must, however, be strictly professional, for a lawyer is no more justified in giving his client money than another man.[j] See title CONTRACTS, "Maintenance," ante.

MALPRACTICE. See MEDICAL LAW, below.

MALICE is the intentional doing of an unlawful or felonious act without just cause or excuse.[k] Express malice exists when the party evinces an intention to commit the crime. Implied malice is that inferred by law from the facts proved.[l] Malice is implied in every case of intentional homicide; and the fact of killing being first proved, all the circumstances of accident, necessity, or informality are to be satisfactorily established by the party charged, unless they arise out of the evidence produced against him to prove the homicide, and the circumstances attending it. If there be in fact circumstances of justification, excuse, or palliation, such proof will naturally indicate them. But where the fact of killing is proved by satisfactory evidence, and there are no circumstances disclosed tending to show justification or excuse, there is nothing to rebut the natural presumption of malice. It is material to the just understanding of this rule, that it only applies where the killing, and nothing further, is shown. For if the circumstances disclosed tend to extenuate the act, the prisoner has the full benefit of such facts.[m] It is a general rule that when a man commits an act unaccompanied by any circumstances justifying its commission, the law presumes that he has acted advisedly, and with an intent to produce the consequences which have ensued. And therefore the intent to kill is conclusively inferred from the deliberate violent use of a deadly weapon.[n]

MALICIOUS INJURIES are those committed wilfully and wantonly without cause.[o]

MALICIOUS MISCHIEF is unlawful, wilful, wanton, or reckless destruction of property. In order to a conviction of the offence of malicious mischief, the jury must be satisfied that the injury was done either out of a spirit of wanton cruelty, or wicked revenge.[p]

MALICIOUS TRESPASS is a wilful, malicious, or mischievous injury of private or public property, real or personal.[q]

MANSLAUGHTER is the unlawful killing of one human being by another, without malice or intention.[r] The distinction between manslaughter and murder is, that in the former, though the act which occasions the death be unlawful, or likely to be attended with bodily mischief, yet the malice, express or implied, which is the very essence of murder, is presumed to be wanting in manslaughter. In manslaughter there can be no accessories before the fact, because there has been no time for premeditation.[s] Involuntary manslaughter happens without intention to injure. Voluntary manslaughter happens from intention to produce the injury. Homicide may become manslaughter in consequence of provocation; by mutual combat; resistance to public officers, etc.; killing in the prosecution of an unlawful or wanton act; or killing in the prosecution of a lawful act improperly performed, or performed without lawful authority. The provocation which reduces the killing from murder to manslaughter is an answer to the presumption of malice, which the law raises in every case of homicide; it is, therefore, no answer where express malice is proved.[t] And to be available the provocation must have been reasonable and recent; for no words or slight provocation will be sufficient, and if the party has had time to cool, malice will be inferred.[u] In cases of mutual combat it is manslaughter only when one of the parties is killed.[v] When death ensues from duelling the rule is different; and such killing is murder. The killing of an officer by resistance to him while acting under lawful authority is murder; but if the officer be acting under a void or illegal authority, or out of his jurisdiction, the killing is manslaughter, or excusable homicide, according to the circumstances of the case.[w] When death ensues from the performance of a lawful act, it may in consequence of the negligence of the offender amount to manslaughter. For instance, if the death has been occasioned by negligent driving.[x] Again, when death ensues from the gross negligence of a medical or surgical practitioner, it is manslaughter. It is no crime for any person to administer medicine, but it is a crime to administer it so rashly and carelessly, or with such criminal inattention, as to produce death; and in this respect there is no difference between the most regular practitioner and the greatest quack.[y]

MAN-STEALING. See KIDNAPPING,[z] above.

MAYHEM. Simple mayhem consists in violently and unlawfully depriving another of the use of any bodily member, or in unlawfully and wilfully disabling the tongue or eye; slitting or biting the nose, ear, or lip of another. Malicious mayhem consists in the purposely, and with premeditation, committing any of the above acts. See GENERAL STATUTES.

At common law mayhem was an injury to any part of a man's body which might render him, in fighting, less able to defend himself, or annoy his adversary.[a] So, the cutting off the ear or nose was not held mayhem at common law.[b]

MENACE. See ABUSE; AFFRONT; ASSAULT, above.

MERGER is the absorption of a less offence in a greater. When a man commits a great crime which includes a lesser the latter is merged in the former. Murder when committed by blows necessarily includes the assault and battery; battery necessarily includes an assault; a burglary when accompanied with the felonious taking of personal property necessarily includes such larceny. In all these and similar cases the lesser crime is merged in or swallowed up by the greater. But when one offence is of the same character with the other, there can be no merger, as in case of a conspiracy to commit a misdemeanor, and the subsequent commission of the misdemeanor in pursuance of the conspiracy; the two crimes being of equal degree, there can be no legal merger.[c] Where the violation of a right admits of both a civil and criminal remedy, the right to prosecute is not merged in another. A defendant is liable in a civil action to the party injured either after his conviction,[d] or acquittal.[e]

MISDEMEANORS are offences punishable by fine, or imprisonment in the common jail, or both. They are all offences inferior to felonies.

MURDER is the act of unlawfully killing a human being with premeditated malice, by a person of sound mind or in possession of his reason.[f] See GENERAL STATUTES.

MUTILATION. See MAYHEM, above.

MUTINY is the unlawful insurrection or revolt of soldiers or seamen against the authority of their commanders; open resistance of officers or opposition to their authority. A mutiny is properly the act of numbers; but by statutes and ordinances for governing the army and navy, the acts which constitute mutiny are multiplied and defined; and acts of individuals, amounting to a resistance of the authority or lawful commands of officers, are declared mutiny. Officers beginning, causing, exciting, or joining mutiny are guilty of the offence. Mutiny is punishable in the navy by fine or imprisonment, or both.[g] And in the army by death or such other punishment as a court martial shall direct.[h] be otherwise, that which makes the contrary of a thing impossible. If man's actions are determined by causes beyond his control he acts from necessity, and is not responsible—nevertheless, no man can plead necessity in excuse for crime.

NIGHT WALKERS are those who sleep by day and walk by night for some unlawful pursuit. They are liable to arrest.[i]

OBSCENITY. See INDECENCY, above.

OBSTRUCTING PROCESS is any act by which one or more persons attempt to prevent, or do prevent the due execution of lawful process. This is an offence against public justice of a very high and presumptive nature; and more particularly so where the obstruction is upon criminal process; a person opposing an arrest upon criminal process becomes thereby an accessory in felony, and a principal in high treason.[j] The officer must be prevented by actual violence, or by threatened violence, accompanied by the exercise of force, or by those having capacity to employ it, by which the officer is prevented from executing his writ. The officer is not required to expose his person by a personal conflict with the offender.[k]

OBSTRUCTIONS TO HIGHWAYS; NAVIGATION; STREAMS; RAILWAYS; ETC. See GENERAL STATUTES.

OVERT ACTS are those which are open to view, apparent, unconcealed. Thus, an overt act of treason is distinguished from a secret design or intention not carried into effect; and even from words spoken. An overt act of treason is proof of the intention of the traitor, because it opens his designs; without an overt act, treason cannot be committed.[l]

PARDON is an act of grace proceeding from the power intrusted with the execution of the laws (or a body having power therefor) which exempts an individual upon whom it is bestowed from the punishment the law inflicts for a crime he has committed.[m] Absolute pardon frees the criminal unconditionally. Conditional pardon frees the criminal upon performance of the conditions annexed, and not otherwise.[n] General pardon extends to all offenders of the same kind; and is either express, as, when a general declaration is made that all offenders of a certain class shall be pardoned, or implied, as in case of the repeal of a penal statute.[o]

The pardoning power is lodged in the executive of the United States and of the various States, and in boards established by law. In some States a concurrence of one of the legislative bodies is required. It is to be exercised in the discretion of the power with whom it is lodged. In order to render pardon valid, it must express with accuracy the crime intended to be forgiven.[p] In case of a conditional pardon, if there be a breach of condition, the pardon is avoided.[q] The effect of pardon is to protect from punishment the criminal for the offence pardoned, but for no other.[r] But pardon for an assault and battery which afterwards becomes murder will not operate as a pardon of the murder.[s] In general, the effect of a full pardon is to restore the convict to all his rights; but to this there are some exceptions. 1. It does not restore civic capacity.[t] 2. It does not affect a status of other persons which has been altered, or a right which has accrued, in consequence of the commission of the crime or its punishment.[u] When pardon is general, either by an act of amnesty, or by the repeal of a penal law, it is not necessary to plead it; because the court is bound, ex-officio, to take notice of it;[v] and the criminal cannot waive such pardon, because by his admittance no one can give the court power to punish him when it judicially appears there is no law to do it. But when the pardon is special, to avail the criminal it must judicially appear that it has been accepted, and for this reason it must be specially pleaded,[w] and if he has obtained a pardon before arraignment, and instead of pleading it in bar he pleads the general issue, he is deemed and taken to have waived the benefit of it, and he cannot afterwards avail himself of it in arrest of judgment.[x]

All contracts made for buying or procuring a pardon for a convict are void.[y]

PENALTIES are pecuniary punishments for the commission of public offences. See FINES, above.

PERJURY is the act or crime of (wilfully and corruptly) making a false oath when lawfully administered[z] in any judicial proceeding.[a] The intention must be wilful; the oath must be taken and the falsehood asserted with deliberation and consciousness of the nature of the statement made; for if it has arisen in consequence of inadvertency, surprise or mistake of the import of the question, then there is no corrupt motive.[b] The oath must be false; the party must believe that what he is swearing is false. The party must be lawfully sworn; an oath therefore taken by a private person or before an officer having no jurisdiction will not amount to perjury. The proceedings must be judicial;[c] and perjury cannot be committed when the matter is not regularly before the court.[d] The assertion must be absolute; but if a man swears that he believes that to be true which he knows is false, it will be perjury,[e] and it is immaterial whether the testimony is given in answer to a question or voluntarily.[f] On a question of estimation of the value of a thing in question, there can be no perjury,[g] unless in some cases a false statement of opinion may become perjury.[h] The oath must be material to the question depending.[i] Perjury may be committed by making a false affirmation as well as a false oath, by an atheist, heathen, Jew, etc., as well as a Christian.

PERSONATION (false) is the assumption of the character of another without lawful authority, for the purpose of committing some act to the prejudice of him personated, without his consent. This was a misdemeanor at common law and punishable as such.[j] See GENERAL STATUTES.

PIRACY is the unlawful act, practice, or crime of robbery or forcible depredation on the high seas; a crime that answers to robbery on the land.[k] The penalty for this offence is death.[x] See title COPYRIGHT, above.

POLYGAMY. See BIGAMY, above.

PREMEDITATION. See INTENTION; MALICE, ETC., above.

PRINCIPAL. See ACCESSORY, above.

PROFANITY. See GENERAL STATUTES.

PROSECUTOR. See ACCUSATION, above.

PROSTITUTION. See HOUSE OF ILL-FAME; LEWDNESS; NIGHT-WALKER, above.

PROVOCATION is that which excites anger; the cause for resentment. No words, epithets, or vituperation whatever will justify an assault, or assault and battery. Provocation simply, unaccompanied by a crime or misdemeanor, will not justify any breach of the peace. In case of homicide, provocation shown to be sufficient may reduce the offence from murder to manslaughter. But when the provocation is given for the purpose of justifying or excusing an intended murder, and the party provoked is killed, it is no justification.[m]

PUNISHMENT is some fine, forfeiture, or penalty prescribed or warranted by law, inflicted upon and suffered by a person for the commission of a public offence, or for the omission of some duty or act required by law, lawfully imposed by a competent judicial tribunal. The object of punishment is two-fold: to reform the offender, and deter him and others from committing like offences; and to protect society.[n]

Punishments may be corporal or otherwise: corporal by death, whipping, imprisonment, or banishment, etc.; otherwise by fine, forfeiture, or other deprivation or penalty imposed upon the goods of the offender, etc.

PUTTING IN FEAR. See PIRACY, above; ROBBERY, below.

QUARREL. See AFFRAY; DUELLING, above.

RAPE is the carnal knowledge of a woman by a man, forcibly and against her will. The knowledge of a woman's person must be forcibly and against her will; and if her consent has not been voluntarily and freely given, the offence is complete; nor will any subsequent acquiescence on her part do away with the guilt of the ravisher. A consent obtained from a woman by actual violence, by confinement, or threats of murder, or by the administration of stupefying drugs, is not such a consent as will shield the offender, or turn his crime into adultery or fornication; and if the connection took place when she was in a state of insensibility from liquor, having been made drunk by the prisoner, though the liquor was given only for the purpose of exciting her, it is a rape.[o] Having carnal knowledge with a woman by a fraud which induces her to suppose it is her husband does not amount to rape;[p] but the party may be indicted for assault. A husband cannot be guilty of a rape on the wife, for his act is not unlawful; but he may be a principal in the second degree of a rape committed on his wife, as where he held her while his servant committed the rape.[q] As a child under ten years of age is incapable, at law, of giving her consent, it follows that the offence may be committed on such child whether she consents or not.

A male infant under fourteen years of age is supposed by law incapable of committing the offence.[r] But not only can an infant under fourteen years, if of sufficient mischievous discretion, but even a woman may be guilty as principal in the second degree.

Above the age of fourteen years a male is always presumed capable of this offence.

Penetration alone, without emission, is sufficient.[s]

REPRIEVE is a withdrawal of sentence for an interval of time, and operates in delay of execution.[t] It is granted by the favor of the pardoning power. They are granted from a necessity of law; for example, when a woman is convicted of a capital offence, after judgment

she may allege pregnancy, in delay of execution.[u] The court is also bound to grant a reprieve when the prisoner becomes insane.[v]

REQUISITION. See FUGITIVE FROM JUSTICE, above.

REPRIMAND is censure pronounced by a public officer against an offender. This species of punishment is used by legislative assemblies to punish members or others guilty of impropriety of conduct toward them or the presiding officer. It is usually delivered by the Speaker.

RESCUE. See ARREST, ESCAPE, above.

RESPITE. See REPRIEVE, above.

RIOTS are acts done in a violent and tumultuous manner, by three or more persons, to the terror of the people, whether the act intended was lawful or unlawful.[w] A riot cannot be committed by fewer than three persons;[x] a judgment against one person for a riot would be void.[y] It must be proved: 1. That there was an unlawful assembling,[z] or a lawful assembly converted into a riot.[a] 2. That there was actual violence and force on the part of the rioters, or such a tendency to force and violence as to strike terror to the public mind.[b] 3. That the defendants acted in the riot, and were participants in the disturbance.[c]

ROBBERY is the forcible and felonious taking, from the person of another, goods, money, personal property or any article of value, by violence or putting in fear.[d] The property must be taken by force or putting in fear,[e] and fear must be induced from apprehension of danger.[f] The knocking down of a man; the snatching of an ear-ring from the ear;[g] pulling out a watch from a fob, by the chain,[h] are examples of violence; but snatching property from a person unawares will not be robbery unless some injury is done to the person.[i] Presenting a pistol and demanding money;[j] threatening to take and kill another child;[k] to destroy one's house;[l] are examples of putting in fear.

Obtaining money by false pretences, misrepresentation or fraud, unaccompanied by violence or putting in fear, is not robbery.

If the property is once taken it will be no defence that the robber delivered it back to the owner.[m]

If a man under an impression that the property is his own obtain it by threats, it is merely trespass and not robbery.[n]

ROUT is a clamorous and tumultuous assembly. It is a disturbance of the peace by persons assembled to do a thing which, if executed, would have made them rioters. It generally agrees in all particulars with a riot, except only in this—that it may be a complete offence without the execution of the intended purpose.[o]

SUBORNATION OF PERJURY is the offence of procuring another to commit legal perjury, who, in consequence of the persuasion, takes the oath to which he has been incited.[p] To complete the offence the false oath must be actually taken, and no abortive attempt to solicit will complete the crime.[q] But the criminal solicitation to commit perjury, though unsuccessful, is a misdemeanor at common law.[r]

SURRENDER OF CRIMINAL. See FUGITIVE FROM JUSTICE, above.

SWEAR. See PERJURY; SUBORNATION OF PERJURY, above.

SWINDLER. See FALSE PRETENCES; FRAUD, etc., above.

SMUGGLING is the unlawful and fraudulent taking into a country or out of it any articles of merchandise prohibited by law, or to avoid the payment of duties upon the same.

SODOMY is a carnal copulation by human beings with each other against nature, or with a beast.[s] It may be committed between two persons, both of whom consent, even between husband and wife;[t] and both may be indicted.[u] Penetration of the mouth is not sodomy.[v]

STEALING. See LARCENY, above.

SECONDS. See DUELLING, above.

SELF-DEFENCE is the act of defending one's person and property from injury.

A man may defend himself and even commit a homicide for the prevention of any forcible and atrocious crime, which, if completed, would amount to a felony,[w] and, of course, under like circumstances, mayhem, wounding and battery would be excusable at common law.[x] A man may repel force by force in defence of his person, property, or habitation against any one who manifests, intends, attempts, or endeavors, by violence or surprise, to commit a forcible felony, such as murder, rape, robbery, arson, burglary, and the like. In these cases he is not required to retreat, but he may resist, and even pursue his adversary, until he has secured himself from all danger.[y]

A man may defend himself when no felony has been threatened or attempted: 1. When the assailant attempts to beat another, and there is no mutual combat; as where one meets another and attempts to commit or does commit an assault and battery on him, the person attacked may defend himself;[z] and in

In these cases both parties are aggressors; and if in the fight one is killed, it will be manslaughter at least, unless the survivor can prove two things, viz., that before the mortal stroke was given, he had refused any further combat, and had retreated as far as he could with safety,[b] and that he killed his adversary from necessity, to avoid his own destruction.[c]

A man may defend himself against animals, and he may, during the attack, kill them, but not afterwards.[d]

TERROR. See AFFRAY; RIOT; ROUT, above.

THOUGHT. See INTENTION; MALICE.

TREASON is the actual levying war against the United States; adhering to their enemies and giving them aid and comfort. In England high treason affects the sovereign or state, such as offences above enumerated. Petit treason affects only individuals, as breach of fidelity. Treason is the highest crime of a civil nature of which a man can be guilty. It is punishable by death or imprisonment at hard labor, not less than five years, and fine not less than ten thousand dollars, and disqualification for any office under the United States.[e] No person can be convicted of treason unless on the testimony of two witnesses to the same overt act, or on confession in open court.

TRESPASS. See MALICIOUS AND MISCHIEVOUS TRESPASS, above.

UNLAWFUL ASSEMBLY is a disturbance of the public peace by three or more persons, who meet together with an intent mutually to assist each other in some unlawful enterprise of a private nature with force and violence. If they move forward towards its execution it is then a rout; if they actually execute their design it amounts to a riot.[f]

VAGRANTS are described as follows:

1. "All persons who unlawfully return into any district whence they have been legally removed, without bringing a certificate from the proper authorities of the city or district to which they belong, stating that they have a settlement therein."

2. "All persons who refuse to perform the work which shall be allotted to them by the overseers of the poor, as provided by law."

3. "All persons going about from door to door, or placing themselves in streets, highways, or other roads, to beg or gather alms, and all persons wandering abroad and begging, who have no fixed place of residence in the township, ward, or district in which the vagrant is arrested."

4. "All persons who shall come from any place without the State or Commonwealth to any place within it and shall be found loitering or residing therein, and who follow no labor, trade, occupation, or business, and have no visible means of subsistence, and can give no reasonable account of themselves or their business in such place."

The punishment for this offence is labor upon the poor farm, upon the roads or highways, or confinement in the common jail, work-house, house of correction, or poor-house for a term of from ten days to six months. See GENERAL STATUTES.

DOMICIL—LAW OF.

The law of the place of domicil governs as to all acts of the parties when not controlled by the law of the place where the contract was made or law of the place where the thing is situated. Personal property of the woman follows the law of domicil upon marriage. A divorce valid under the law of domicil of both parties is good everywhere.[i] But there must be an actual domicil of one party at least,[j] and personal jurisdiction over both parties to make a divorce binding extra territorially.[k]

The state and condition of the person, according to the law of his domicil, will generally, though not universally, be regarded in other countries as to acts done, rights acquired, or contracts made in the place of his native domicil; but as to acts, rights, and contracts done, acquired or made out of his native domicil, the law of place will generally govern in respect to his capacity and condition.[l] If a person goes into a foreign country and engages in trade there, he is, by the law of nations, to be considered a merchant of that country, and subject for all civil purposes, whether that country be hostile or neutral,[m] and this whether the effect be to render him hostile or neutral in respect to his bona fide trade.[n]

The disposition of, succession to, or distribution of the personal property of a decedent, wherever situated, is to be made in accordance to the law of his actual domicil at the time of his death;[o] the principle applies equally to cases of voluntary transfer, of intestacy, and of testaments.[p]

Wills are to be governed by the law of the domicil as to the capacity of the parties,[q] and as to their validity and effect in relation to the transfer of personal property,[r] but by the law of the place where the thing is situated as to the transfer of real property.[s] The forms and solemnities of the place of domicil must be observed.[t] The local law is to determine the character of property.[u] The interpretation of a will is to be according to the law of the place of actual domicil.[v] The succession to the personal property of an intestate is governed exclusively by the law of his actual domicil at the time of his death.[w] This includes the ascertainment of the person who is to be their heir.[x] The question as to whether debts are to be paid by the administrator from the personalty or realty is to be decided by the law of his domicil.[y]

An assignment of property for the benefit of creditors, valid by the law of the domicil, is generally recognized as valid everywhere,[z] in the absence of a positive statute to the contrary;[a] but not to the injury of citizens of the foreign state in which property is situated.[b] But a compulsory assignment by force of statute is not of extra territorial operation.[c] Distribution of the effects of insolvent or bankrupt debtors is to be made according to the law of the domicil, subject to the same qualifications.[d]

EX POST FACTO LAW.

Ex post facto is, after the act. An ex post facto law is a statute which would render an act punishable in a manner in which it was not punishable when it was committed.[e] A law made to punish acts committed before the existence of such law, and which had not been declared crimes by preceding laws.[f] By the Constitution of the United States Congress is forbidden to pass ex post facto laws.[g] And by Section X., Subdiv. 1, of the same instrument, as well as by our own constitution, a similar restriction is placed upon the State legislature. Such law is void as to those cases in which, if given effect, it would be ex post facto; but so far only. In cases arising under it, it may have effect; for as a rule for the future it is not ex post facto. There is a distinction between ex post facto laws and retrospective laws; every ex post facto law must necessarily be retrospective, but every retrospective law is not ex post facto law; the former only are prohibited. It is fully settled that the term ex post facto, as used in the Constitution, is to be taken in a limited sense, as referring to criminal or penal statutes alone, and that the policy, the reason, and the humanity of the prohibition against passing ex post facto laws do not extend to civil cases, to cases that merely affect the private property of citizens. Some of the most necessary acts of legislation are, on the contrary, founded upon the principles that private rights must yield to public exigencies.[h]

Laws under the following circumstances are to be considered ex post facto laws within the words and intent of the prohibition:

1. Every law that makes an act done before the passing of the law, and which was innocent when done, criminal, and punishes such action.

2. Every law that aggravates a crime, or makes it greater than it was when it was committed.

3. Every law that changes the punishment, and inflicts a greater punishment than the law annexed to the crime when committed; though it would be otherwise of a law mitigating the punishment.[i]

4. Every law that alters the legal rules of evidence, and receives less or different testimony than the law required at the time of the commission of the offence, in order to convict the offender; though it might be otherwise of a law merely modifying the remedy or mode of procedure.[j]

The right to pass retrospective laws, with the exceptions above mentioned, become obligatory, unless prohibited by the constitution of the State.[k] And laws should never be consid-

FOREIGN LAW.

FOREIGN LAWS are the laws of a foreign country,[m] not the laws of the different States of this country.

The courts do not judicially take notice of foreign laws; and they must, therefore, be proved as facts.[n] The manner of proof varies according to circumstances. As a general rule, the best testimony or proof is required; for no proof will be received which presupposes better testimony attainable by the party who offers it. When the best testimony cannot be obtained, secondary evidence will be received.[o]

Exemplified or sworn copies of written laws and other public documents must, as a general thing, be produced, when they can be procured; but should they be refused by the competent authorities, then inferior proof may be admitted.[o] Where our own government has promulgated a foreign law or ordinance of a public nature as authentic, that is held sufficient evidence of its existence.[p] When foreign laws cannot be proved by some mode which the law respects as being of equal authority to an oath, they must be verified by the sanction of an oath. The usual modes of authenticating them are by an exemplification under the great seal of the State, or by a copy proved by oath to be a true copy, or by a certificate of an officer authorized by law, which must itself be duly authenticated.[q] Foreign unwritten laws, customs, and usages may be proved, and are ordinarily proved, by parol evidence; and when such evidence is objected to on the ground that the law in question is a written law, the party objecting must show that fact.[r] Witnesses in Cuba, examined under a commission touching the execution of a will, testified, in general terms, that it was executed according to the law of that country; and, it not appearing from the testimony that there was any written law upon the subject, the proof was held sufficient.[s] A defendant pleaded infancy in an action upon a contract governed by the law of Jamaica; held, that the law was to be proven as a matter of fact, and that the burden lay upon him to show it.[t]

Proof of such unwritten law is usually made by the testimony of witnesses learned in the law and competent to state it correctly under oath.[u] The public seal of a foreign sovereign or state affixed to a writing, purporting to be a written edict, or law, or judgment, is of itself the highest evidence, and no further proof is required of such public seal.[v] But the seal of a foreign court is not, in general, evidence without further proof, and must, therefore, be established by competent testimony.[w]

The acts of the legislatures of the several States shall be authenticated by having the seal of their respective States affixed thereto.[x] But the rules prescribed by acts of Congress do not exclude every other mode of authentication, and courts may admit proof of the acts of the legislatures of the several States, although not authenticated under the acts of Congress. Accordingly, a printed volume, purporting on its face to contain the laws of a sister State, is admissible as prima facie evidence to prove the statute law of that State.[y]

The effect of foreign laws when proved is properly referable to the court. The object of the proof of foreign laws is to enable the court to instruct the jury what is, in point of law, the result from foreign laws to be applied to the matters in controversy before them. The court is, therefore, to decide what is the proper evidence of the laws of a foreign country; and when evidence is given of those laws, the court is to judge of their applicability to the matter in issue.[z]

FORUM—LAW OF.

The law of the forum (lex fori) is the law of the country, to the tribunal of which appeal is made,[a] or where the action or proceeding is instituted, or the remedy sought.

The forms of remedies, modes of proceeding, and execution of judgments are to be regulated solely and exclusively by the laws of the place where the action is instituted.[f] The law of the forum governs as to the nature, extent, and character of the remedy,[g] as in case of instruments considered sealed where made, but not in the country where sued upon,[h] and decides as to the deprivation of the remedy. The law of the forum is to decide who are proper parties to a suit.[h] Foreign corporations may sue[i] and be sued, when they have property within the jurisdiction.[j] Arrest and imprisonment may be allowed by the law of the forum, though they are not by the law of the place where the contract was made.[l] Where the debt is discharged by the law of the place creating it, such a discharge will amount to a discharge everywhere.[m] It must be a discharge from the debt, and not an exemption from the effect of particular means of enforcing the remedy.[n] The forms of judgment and execution are to be determined by the law of the forum.[o] For the LAW OF INTEREST, as affected by the law of the forum, see CONFLICT OF LAWS, above. For DAMAGES, see title, DAMAGES, ante.

Statutes of limitation affect the remedy only, and, hence, the law of the forum will be the governing law.[p] But these statutes restrict the remedy for citizens and strangers alike.[q] The restriction applies to a suit on a foreign judgment.[r]

The right of set-off is to be determined by the law of the forum.[s] Liens, implied hypothecations and priorities of claim generally, are matters of remedy.[t] A prescriptive title to personal property acquired in a former domicil will be respected by the law of the forum.[u]

Questions of the admissibility and effect of evidence are to be determined by the law of the forum.[v]

The law of the place is presumed to be that of the forum till the contrary is shown,[w] and also the law of the place where the thing is situated.[x]

INTERNATIONAL LAW is that existing and regulating the mutual intercourse between different nations. It is distinguished as the rights among nations and the rights of nations. The natural law, or the doctrine of rights and of state, forms the scientific basis of international law; for nations, like lesser communities, and like individuals, have rights and correlative obligations, moral claims, and duties. The particular sources of international law are jural and moral. The jural elements are: 1. The rights of states or nations as such, deducible from its nature and its office as protector of those who live under its law. 2. The right which the state or nation shares with individuals, and in part with artificial persons, as the rights of property, contract, and reputation; and, 3. The rights which arise when it is wronged, as those of self-protection and redress. To these have been joined by some the rights of punishments and of conquest—the latter, at least, without good reason; for there is and can be no naked right of conquest, irrespective of redress and self-protection. The moral elements are the duties of humanity, comity, and intercourse.

Nations are voluntary: 1. In deciding the question what intercourse they will hold with each other; 2. That they are voluntary in defining their rights and obligations, moral claims and duties, although these have an objective existence beyond the control of the will of nations; and, 3. That when international law has arisen by the free assent of those who enter into certain arrangements, obedience to its provisions is as truly in accordance with natural law—which requires the observance of contracts—as if natural law had been intuitively discerned or revealed from heaven and no consent had been necessary at the outset.

ALIENS. It cannot be affirmed that a state is obligated, in strict right, to admit foreigners into or to allow them transit across its territory, or even to hold intercourse with them. All this may be its duty, and perhaps, when its territory affords the only convenient pathway to the rest of the world or its commodities are necessary to others of mankind, transit and intercourse may be enforced. But, aside from these extreme cases, intercourse is only a duty, and not definable with precision, as is shown by the endless varieties of commercial treaties. It can only be said that the practice of Christian states is growing more and more liberal, both as regards admitting foreigners into their territories, and to the enjoyment of those rights of person and property which the natives possess, and as regards domiciliating them, or even incorporating them, afterwards, if they desire it, into the body politic. The multiplied and very close relations which have arisen between nations in modern times, through domiciled or temporary residents, have given rise to the question, What law, in particular cases involving personal status, property, contracts, family rights, and succession, shall control the decisions of the courts? Shall it be always the lex loci, or sometimes some other? The answers to these questions are given in private international law, or the conflict of law, as it is sometimes called,—a very interesting branch of law, as showing how the Christian nations are coming from age to age nearer to one another in their views of the private relations of men.

INTERCOURSE requires its agents, both those whose office it is to attend to the relations of states and the rights of their countrymen in general, and those who look after the commercial interests of individuals. The former share with public vessels, and with sovereigns travelling abroad, certain exemptions from the law of the land to which they are sent. Their persons are ordinarily inviolate; they are not subject to foreign, civil, or criminal jurisdiction; they are generally exempt from imposts; they have liberty of worship, and a certain power over their trains, who likewise share their exemptions. Only within five centuries have ambassadors resided permanently abroad—a change which has had an important effect on the relations of states. Consuls have almost none of the privileges of ambassadors, except in countries beyond the pale of Christianity.

RIGHTS IN GENERAL. The rights of the state or nation, as such, may be comprised under the term sovereignty, or be divided into sovereignty, independence, and equality; by which latter term is intended equality of rights. Sovereignty and independence are two sides of the same property, and equality of rights necessarily belongs to sovereign states, whatever be their size or constitution; for no reason can be assigned why all states, as they have the same powers and destination in the system of things, should not have identically the same rights. States are thus, as far as other states are concerned, masters over themselves and over their subjects, free to make such changes in their laws and constitutions as they may choose, and yet incapable by any change, whether it be union, or separation, or whatever else, of escaping existing obligations. With regard to every state, international law only asks whether it be such in reality, whether it actually is invested with the properties of a state. With forms of government international law has nothing to do. All forms of government, under which a state can discharge its obligations and duties to others, are, so far as this code is concerned, equally legitimate. Thus, the rule of non-intervention in the affairs of other states is a well-settled principle of international law. In the European system, however, there is an acknowledged exception to this rule, and also a claim on the part of certain states to a still wider departure from the rule of non-intervention, which other states have not as yet admitted. It is conceded that any political action of any state or states which seriously threatens the existence or safety of others, any disturbance of the balance of power, may be resisted and put down. This must be regarded as an application of the primary principle of self-preservation to the affairs of nations. But when certain states claim a right to interfere in the internal affairs of others in order to suppress constitutional movements and the action of a people without its own sphere, this is as yet an unauthorized ground of interference. The plea here is, on the part of those states which have asserted such a right, especially of Austria, Prussia, Russia, and at times of France, that internal revolutions are the result of widespread conspiracies, and if successful anywhere are fatal to the peace and prosperity of all absolute or non-constitutional governments. The right, if admitted, would destroy by an international law all power of the people in any state over their government, and would place the smaller states under the tutelage of two or three of the larger. England has always protested against this enlargement of the right of interference, and France has established more than one revolutionary government in spite of it.

TERRITORY. As to the question of territory, international law is tolerably clear. Beside the land and water included within the line of boundary separating one state from another, it regards as territory the coast-water to the distance of a marine league, and the portions of sea within lines drawn between headlands not very remote, or, in other words, those parts of the sea which are closely connected with a particular country when it needs to defend itself against attack, and its laws are exposed to violation. The high sea, on the other hand, is free, and so is every avenue from one part of the sea to another, which is necessary for the intercourse of the world. It has been held that rivers are exclusively under the jurisdiction of countries through which they flow, so that the dwellers on their upper waters have no absolute right of passage to and from the sea; but practically, at present, all the rivers which divide or run through different states, are free for all those who live upon them, if not for all mankind. It has been claimed that ships are territory; but it is safer to say that they are under the jurisdiction of their own state until they come within that of another state. By comity, public vessels are exempt from foreign jurisdiction, whether in foreign ports or elsewhere.

TREATIES. Nations, like individuals, have the rights of contract, and their treaties are subject to the same rules of interpretation and of morality which govern in municipal law. An interesting description of treaties are those of guaranty, by which sometimes a right of intervention in the affairs of other states is secured beforehand. But treaties may be broken, and all other rights invaded; and there is no court of appeal where wrongs done by states can be tried. The rights of self-defence and of redress now arise, and are of such importance that but for redress by force or war, and to prevent war, international law would be a very brief science.

WARFARE. The laws and usages of modern warfare show a great advance of the nations in humanity since the middle ages. The following are among the leading principles and usages:

That declarations of war, as formerly practised, are unnecessary; the change in this respect being due chiefly to the intimate knowledge which nations now have, through resident ambassadors and in other ways, of each other's movements and dispositions.

That at the opening of war the subjects of one hostile state within the territory of another are protected in their persons and property, and this notwithstanding it is conceded that by strict right such property is liable to confiscation.

That war is waged between states, and by the active war agents of the parties, but that non-combatants are to be uninjured in person and property by an invading army. Contributions or requisitions, however, are still collected from a conquered or occupied territory, and property is taken for the uses of armies at a compensation.

That combatants, when surrendering themselves in battle, are spared, and are to be treated with humanity during their captivity, until exchanged or ransomed.

That even public property, when not of a military character, is exempt from the ordinary operations of war, unless necessity requires the opposite course.

That in the storming of inhabited towns great license has hitherto been given to the besieging party; and this is one of the blots of modern as well as of ancient warfare. But humane commanders avoid the bombardment of fortified towns as far as possible; while mere fortresses may be assailed in any manner.

The laws of sea-warfare have not as yet come up to the level of those of land-warfare. Especially is capture allowed on the sea in cases where it would not occur on the land. Yet there are indications of a change in this respect; privateering has been abandoned by many states, and there is a growing demand that all capture upon the sea, even from enemies, except for violations of the rules of contraband, blockade, and search, shall cease.

When captures are made on the sea, the title, by modern law, does not fully vest in the captor at the moment, but needs to pass under the revision of a competent court. The captured vessel may be ransomed on the sea, unless municipal law forbids, and the ransom is of the nature of a safe-conduct. If a vessel is recaptured, or rescued from other perils, a compensation is due to the rescuer, which is called salvage; which see.

In modern international law, questions of neutrality play a great part. A neutral is one, strictly, who affords assistance to neither party; for assistance afforded to both alike, in almost every case, would benefit one party and be of little use to the other. The neutral territory, on land and sea, must be untouched by the war; and for all violations of this rule the neutral can take or demand satisfaction.

The principal liabilities of neutral trade are the following:

In regard to the nationality of goods and vessels, the rule, on the whole, has been that enemy's goods were exposed to capture on any vessel, and neutral's safe on any, and that the neutral vessel was not guilty for having enemy's goods on board. Owing to the declaration of the peace of Paris in 1856, the humane rule that free ships make free goods will no doubt become universal.

Certain articles of especial use in war are called contraband, and are liable to capture. But the list has been stretched by belligerents, especially by England, so as to include naval stores and provisions; and then, to cure the hardship of the rule, another—the rule of pre-emption—has been introduced. The true doctrine with regard to contraband seems to be that nothing can be so called unless nations have agreed so to consider it; or, in other words, that articles cannot become occasionally contraband owing to the convenience of a belligerent.

An attempt of a neutral ship to enter a blockaded place is a gross violation of neutrality; and, as in cases of contraband trade the goods, so here the guilty vessel, is confiscated. But blockade must exist in fact, and not alone upon paper, must be made known to neutrals, and, if discontinued, must be resumed with a new notification.

To carry out the rights of war, the right of search is indispensable; and such search ought to be submitted to without resistance. Search is exclusively a war right, excepting that vessels in peace can be arrested near the coast on suspicion of violating revenue laws, and anywhere on suspicion of piracy. The slave-trade not being piracy by the law of nations, vessels of other nations cannot be searched on suspicion of being engaged in this traffic. And here comes in the question which has agitated the two leading commercial states of Christendom: How shall it be known that a vessel is of a nationality which renders search unlawful? The English claim, and justly, that they have a right to ascertain this simple fact by detention and examination; the United States contend that if in so doing mistakes are committed, compensation is due, and to this England has agreed.

MEDICAL LAW is that branch of the law which is affected by medical facts, and in which the principles and practice of medicine is required for the elucidation and settlement of doubtful questions arising in the course of judicial proceedings. These questions are embraced in five different classes: they arise: 1. From the relations of sex; as, delivery, hermaphroditism, impotency, legitimacy, pregnancy, rape, sterility. 2. From injuries inflicted upon the living organization; as, infanticide, poisons, wounds, persons found dead.

3. From disqualifying diseases; as, different forms of mental alienation or derangement. 4. From deceptive practices; as, feigned diseases. 5. From miscellaneous causes; as, age, identity, life insurance, presumption of seniorship, and medical evidence.

ABORTION is the act of miscarrying or producing young before the natural time, or before the fœtus is perfectly formed. The expulsion of the fœtus during utero-gestation, and before it has acquired the power of sustaining an independent life.

The criminal and unnatural means of producing abortion are of two kinds. General, or those which seek to produce the expulsion through the constitution of the mother, which are cathartics,[a] diuretics,[b] emetics,[c] ammenagogues,[d] and venesection.[e] Local or mechanical means, which consist either of external violence applied to the abdomen or loins, or of instruments introduced into the uterus for the purpose of rupturing the membranes, and thus bringing on premature action of the womb. These local or mechanical means not unfrequently produce the death of the mother, as well as that of the fœtus.

The innocent or natural causes of producing abortion are of two kinds. In the mother, as great debility, disease, excessive venereal indulgence, habit of miscarriage, malformation of the pelvis,[f] plethora,[g] or irritable or nervous temperament in the fœtus[h] or its dependencies; usually disease existing in the ovum,[i] the membranes, placenta,[j] or the fœtus itself.

See DEATH, below.

ACCOUCHMENT is delivery in child-bed; the act of giving birth to a child. When it is necessary to prove the filiation of an individual by the accouchment, it may be proven by the direct testimony of one who was present, as a physician, midwife, or other person.[k]

APOPLEXY AND PARALYSIS imply an affection of the brain; supposed to be only different degrees of the same affection. In apoplexy the patient is suddenly deprived of consciousness and sensibility, and so continues for a period varying from a few hours to a few days, when he dies or begins to recover. The recovery may, however, be imperfect, leaving some mental impairment, or loss of power in the muscles of voluntary motion, remaining for a time, if not for life. In paralysis there is a loss of power in some of the voluntary muscles —those of the arms, eyes, face, or legs; it may be the sequel of apoplexy, or it may be the primary affection; occurring very much like an attack of apoplexy. Apoplexy is the abolition of sense and voluntary motion, from suspension of the functions of the cerebrum;[l] apparent death; suspended animation, as fainting, swooning. Paralysis is an abolition of function, whether of intellect, general or special sensation, sympathetic or voluntary motion.

In cases where wills are made in that equivocal condition which sometimes follows an attack of apoplexy or paralysis, and their validity is contested on the score of mental incompetency, there are generally two questions at issue, viz.: 1. The absolute amount of mental impairment; and 2. The degree of foreign influence exerted upon the testator. These questions cannot be considered independently of each other; neither of them alone might be sufficient to invalidate an act, while together they might have that effect.

In testing the mental capacity of paralytics, reference should be had to the nature of the act in question. The question is, "Had the testator sufficient mental capacity to make the will in dispute?" and not "Had he sufficient capacity to make a will?" In order to arrive at correct conclusions on this point, we must remember, among other things, that the power to appreciate the terms of a proposition must not be confounded with the power to discern its consequences and relations.

In testing the mental capacity of one who has lost the power of speech, it is difficult, and often impossible, to arrive at correct results. If the person is able and willing to communicate his thoughts in writing, his mental capacity may be clearly revealed. If not disposed to write he may communicate by constructing sentences by the help of the alphabet, block letters, or dictionary; failing in this, resort must be had to the expression of assent or dissent by signs to propositions made by others. If the act in question is complicated in its relations, unreasonable in its dispositions, or bears the slightest trace of foreign influence, it will be regarded with suspicion; for a will thus drawn is not absolutely the will of the testator, since every disposition originated in the minds of others.[m]

ASPHYXY is suspended animation, particularly from suffocation or drowning, or the inspiration of irrespirable gases; a temporary suspension of the motion of the heart and arteries; cessation of breathing and pulsation; fainting; swooning. Where the cause of asphyxy becomes the subject of legal inquiry, it is necessary to ascertain whether the person

BARRENNESS. See STERILITY, below.

BIRTH is the act of bringing forth a human being, or of its coming into life, of its being wholly born. The conditions of live birth are not satisfied when a part of the body is born; the whole body must be brought into the world, and detached from that of the mother (but it is not necessary that there should be a separation of the umbilical cord; that may still connect the child with its mother);[m] and after this event the child must be alive.[n] The circulating system must also be changed, and the child must have an independent circulation.[o]

Breathing, though a usual sign of life, is not conclusive that a child was wholly born alive, as breathing may take place before the whole delivery of the mother is complete.[p]

Delivery or child-birth; the act of a woman in giving birth to a child.

The usual signs of delivery are:

If the female be examined within three or four days after the occurrence of delivery, the following circumstances will generally be observed: greater or less weakness, a slight paleness of the face, the eye a little sunken and surrounded by a purplish or dark-brown colored ring, and a whiteness of the skin like that of a person convalescing from disease. The belly is soft, the skin of the abdomen is lax, lies in folds, and is traversed in various directions by shining reddish and whitish lines, which especially extend from the groin and pubes to the navel. These lines have sometimes been termed lineæ albicantes, and are particularly observed near the umbilical region, where the abdomen has experienced the greatest distension. The breasts become tumid and hard, and, on pressure, emit a fluid, which at first is serous and afterwards gradually becomes whiter; and the presence of this secretion is generally accompanied with a full pulse and soft skin, covered with a moisture of a peculiar and somewhat acid odor. The areolæ round the nipples are dark-colored. The external genital organs and vagina are dilated and tumefied throughout the whole of their extent, from the pressure of the fœtus. The uterus may be felt through the abdominal parietes, voluminous, firm, and globular, and rising nearly as high as the umbilicus. Its orifice is soft and tumid, and dilated so as to admit two or more fingers. The fourchette, or anterior margin of the perinæum, is sometimes torn, or 't is lax, and appears to have suffered considerable distension. A discharge (termed the lochial) commences from the uterus, which is distinguished from the menses by its pale color, its peculiar and well-known smell, and its duration. The lochia are at first of a red color, and gradually become lighter until they cease.

These signs may generally be relied upon as indicating the state of pregnancy: yet it requires much experience in order not to be deceived by appearances.

The lochial discharge might be mistaken for menstruation, or fluor albus, were it not for its peculiar smell; and this it has been found impossible, by any artifice, to destroy.

Relaxation of the soft parts arises as frequently from menstruation as from delivery; but in these cases the os uteri and vagina are not so much tumefied, nor is there that tenderness and swelling. The parts are found pale and flabby when all signs of contusion disappear after delivery; and this circumstance does not follow menstruation.

The presence of milk, though a usual sign of delivery, is not always to be relied upon; for this secretion may take place independent of pregnancy.

The wrinkles and relaxation of the abdomen which follow delivery may be the consequence of dropsy, or of lankness following great obesity. This state of the parts is also seldom striking after the birth of the first child, as they shortly resume their natural state.

—— Concealed delivery generally takes place when the woman either has destroyed her offspring or it was born dead. In suspected cases the following circumstances should be attended to: 1. The proofs of pregnancy which arise in consequence of the examination of the mother. When she has been pregnant, and has been delivered, the usual signs of delivery, mentioned above, will be present. A careful investigation as to the woman's appearance before and since the delivery will have some weight; though such evidence is not always to be relied upon, as such appearances are not unfrequently deceptive. 2. The proofs of recent delivery. 3. The connection between the supposed state of parturition and the state of the child that is found; for if the age of the child do not correspond to that time it will be a strong circumstance in favor of the mother's innocence. A redness of the skin and an attachment of the umbilical cord to the navel indicate a recent birth. Whether the child was living at its birth, belongs to the subject of infanticide, which see below.

—— Pretended delivery may present itself in three points of view. 1. When the female who feigns has never been pregnant. When thoroughly investigated, this may always be detected. There are signs which must be present and cannot be feigned. An enlargement of the orifice of the uterus, and a tumefaction of the organs of generation, should always be present, and if absent are conclusive against the fact.[q] 2. When the pretended pregnancy and delivery have been preceded by one or more deliveries. In this case attention should be given to the following circumstances: the mystery, if any, which has been affected with regard to the situation of the female; her age; that of her husband; and particularly, whether

Those who have, however, the essential parts of the human form, and have merely some defect of conformation, are capable of inheriting if otherwise qualified.[r] See DELIVERY, below.

No living human birth, however much it may differ from human shape, can be lawfully destroyed.[s] The killing of a child, though joined to its mother by the umbilical cord, is murder.[t]

BRUISES are injuries produced by violence upon the person without breaking the continuity of the skin. It is nearly synonymous with contusion.[u]

See CONTUSIONS; WOUNDS, below.

COMMON-SENSE is the common association, judgment, and perception in relation to persons and things which agrees with that of the generality of mankind. When a particular individual differs from the generality of mankind or persons in these respects, he is said not to have common sense, or not to be in his senses.[v]

CONTUSIONS are injuries arising from shocks of the body with large surfaces, which presents no loss of substance and no apparent wound. If the skin be divided, the injury takes the name of a contused wound.[w]

DELIRIUM FEBRILE is a mental aberration incident to fevers, and sometimes in the last stages of chronic diseases.

The aberration is mostly of a subjective character, maintained by the inward activity of the mind rather than by outward impressions. "Regardless of persons or things around him, and scarcely capable of recognizing them when aroused by his attendants, the patient retires within himself, to dwell upon the scenes and events of the past, which pass before it in wild and disorderly array, while the tongue feebly records the varying impressions, in the form of disjointed, incoherent discourse, or of senseless rhapsody."[x] It comes on gradually, being first manifested by talking while asleep, and by a momentary forgetfulness of persons and things on waking. Fully aroused, however, the mind becomes clear and tranquil, and so continues until the return of sleep, when the same incidents recur. Gradually the mental disorder becomes more intense, and the intervals between its returns of shorter duration, until they disappear altogether. Occasionally the past is revived with wonderful vividness, and acquirements are displayed which the patient before his illness had entirely forgotten. Instances are related of persons speaking in a language which, though acquired in youth, had long since passed from their memory.

The only acts which can possibly be affected by delirium are wills, which are often made in the last illness during the periods when the mind is apparently clear. Under such circumstances it may be questioned whether the apparent clearness was or was not real; and it is a question not always easily answered. In the early stages of delirium the mind may be quite clear, no doubt, in the intervals, while it is no less certain that there comes a period at last when no really lucid interval occurs and the mind is reliable at no time. The person may be still, and even answer questions with some degree of pertinence, while a close examination would show the mind to be in a dreamy condition and unable to appreciate any nice relations. In all these cases the question to be met is, whether the delirium which confessedly existed before the act left upon the mind no trace of its influence; whether the testator, calm, quiet, clear, and coherent as he seemed, was not quite unconscious of the nature of the act he was performing. The state of things implied in these questions is not fanciful. In every case it may possibly exist, and the questions must be met.

After obtaining all the light which can be thrown on the mental condition of the testator by nurses, servants, and physicians, then the character of the act itself and the circumstances which accompany it require a careful investigation. If it should appear that the mind was apparently clear, and that the act was a rational act rationally done, consistent one part with another, and in accordance with wishes or instructions previously expressed, and without any appearance of foreign influence, then it would be established. A different state of things would to that extent raise suspicion and throw discredit on the act. Yet at the very best it will occasionally happen, so dubious sometimes are the indications, that the decision will be largely conjectural.[y]

DELIRIUM TREMENS (Mania-a-potu) is a mental disorder induced by the excessive and prolonged use of intoxicating liquors. It generally appears as a sequel to a few days abstinence.

The nature of the connection between this disease and abstinence is not yet clearly understood. Where the former succeeds a broken limb, or any other severe accident that confines the patient to his bed and obliges him to abstain, it would seem as if its development were favored by the constitutional disturbance then existing. In other cases, where the abstinence is apparently voluntary, there is some reason to suppose that it is really the incubation of the disease, and not its cause.

Its approach is generally indicated by a slight tremor and faltering of the hands and lower extremities, a tremulousness of the voice, a certain restlessness and sense of anxiety which the patient knows not how to describe or account for, disturbed sleep, and impaired appetite. These symptoms having continued two or three days, at the end of which time they have usually increased in severity, the patient ceases to sleep altogether, and soon becomes delirious at intervals. After a while the delirium becomes constant, as well as the utter absence of sleep. This state of watchfulness and delirium continues three or four days, when, if the patient recover, it is succeeded by sleep, which at first appears in uneasy and irregular naps, and lastly in long, sound, and refreshing slumbers. When sleep does not supervene about this time, the disease proves fatal.

Delirium tremens is marked by some peculiar characters. Almost invariably the patient manifests feelings of fear and suspicion, and labors under continual apprehension of being made the victim of sinister designs and practices. He imagines that people have conspired to rob and murder him, and insists that he can hear them in an adjoining room arranging their plans and preparing to rush upon him, or that he is forcibly detained and prevented from going to his own home. One of the most common hallucinations in this disease is that of constantly seeing devils, snakes, or vermin around him and on him. Under the influence of the terrors inspired by these notions, the wretched patient often endeavors to cut his throat, or jump out of the window, or murder his wife, or some one else whom his disordered imagination identifies with his enemies.

Delirium tremens must not be confounded with other forms of mental derangement which occur in connection with intemperate habits. Hard drinking may produce a paroxysm of maniacal excitement, or a host of hallucinations and delusions, which disappear after a few days' abstinence from drink and are succeeded by the ordinary mental condition.[a] For instance, a prisoner was defended on the plea that the homicide for which he was indicted was committed in a fit of delirium tremens. There was no doubt that he was laboring under some form of insanity; but the fact, which appeared in evidence, that his reason returned before the recurrence of sound sleep, rendered it very doubtful whether the trouble was delirium tremens, although in every other respect it looked like that disease.

Delirium tremens annuls responsibility for any act that may be committed under its influence; provided, of course, that the mental condition can stand the tests applied in other forms of insanity. The law does not look to the remote causes of the mental affection; and the rule on this point is that if the act is not committed under the immediate influence of intoxicating drinks, the plea of insanity is not invalidated by the fact that it is the result of drinking at some previous time. Such drinking may be morally wrong; but the same may be said of other vicious indulgences which give rise to much of the insanity which exists in the world.[a]

It was held that delirium tremens was not a valid defence, because the prisoner knew, by repeated experience, that indulgence in drinking would probably bring on an attack of the disease.

It is not quite certain what the rule of law is in England. Two cases are cited where the plea of delirium tremens was admitted in excuse for crime.[b]

DEATH is the total and permanent cessation of all the vital functions; when all the organs have not only ceased to act, but have lost their susceptibility of renewed action. Actual death is distinguished from apparent death by several signs, some more conclusive than the others. 1. Cessation of the circulation. 2. Cessation of the respiration. 3. The facies Hippocratii[c] —wrinkled brow, hollow eyes, pointed nose, hollow, wrinkled temples, elevated ears, relaxed lips, sunken cheek bones, and wrinkled and pointed chin. 4. Collapsed and softened state of the eye. 5. Pallor and loss of elasticity of the skin. 6. Insensibility and immovability. 7. Extinction of muscular irritability. 8. Extinction of animal heat. 9. Muscular rigidity; and 10. The supervening of putrefaction, which depends something upon age, sex, condition of the body, and cause of death; also upon period, place, and mode of interment. The process is increased by a high temperature, moisture, and access to air.

Various indications as to whether the death is the act of God or the result of violence may be gathered from the position and circumstances in which the body is found, and the condition of the place where the body is found. 1. Whether it be a case of homicide, suicide, or visitation of God; and, 2. Whether, if one of homicide, the murder occurred there, or some other place, the body having been brought there and left. The points to be noted are whether the ground appears to have been disturbed from its natural condition; whether there are any, and what, indications of a struggle; whether there are any marks of footsteps, and, if any, their size, number, the direction to which they lead, and whence they came; whether any traces of blood or hair can be found; and whether any, or what, instruments or weapons, which could have caused death, are found in the vicinity; and all such instruments should be carefully preserved, so that they may be identified.[c]

As thorough an examination as possible should be made of the body before changing its position, or that of any of the limbs, or varying in any respect its relations with surrounding bodies. So, also, of the wounds, if any, in order from their nature, character, form, and appearance, to determine the instrument by which they were inflicted, and also their agency in causing the death, the direction from which they were dealt, their extent, depth, vessels severed, etc. So, also, of the clothes worn by the deceased, and any parts torn, or presenting any unusual appearance. A memorandum should be made of the color of the skin, the temperature of the body, the existence and extent of cadaveric rigidity of the muscular system, the state of the eyes and sphincter muscles, noting at the same time whatever swellings, ecchymosis, or livid, black, or yellow spots, wounds, ulcers, contusions, fractures, or luxation may be present. The fluids which have exuded from the nose, mouth, ears, sexual organs, etc., should be carefully noted; and when the deceased is a female, it will be proper to examine the sexual organs with care, with a view of ascertaining whether before death the crime of rape had or had not been committed. The amount of decomposition should also be noted, with a view of determining when the death took place.

Evidences of Death by Violence. This involves the inquiry as to the cause of death in all cases of the finding of bodies divested of life through unknown agencies. It seeks to gather all the evidence furnished by the body and surrounding circumstances bearing upon this difficult, and, at best, doubtful subject; it more immediately concerns the duties of the coroner; but is liable to come up subsequently for a more thorough and searching investigation. Hence, its briefness here needs no comment.

The first point for determination is, whether the death was the act of God, or the result of violence. Sudden death is generally produced by a powerful invasion of the living forces that develop themselves in the heart, brain, or lungs; the first is called[d] syncope,[e] the second, apoplexy,[f] and the third, asphyxia.[g] The two last are the most important to be understood in connection with the subject of persons found dead.

In death from apoplexy, the sudden invasion of the brain destroys innervation, by which the circulation is arrested, each side of the heart containing its due proportion of blood, and the cavities are all distended from loss of power to propel its contents. Death by apoplexy is disclosed by a certain apopletic make, or form of body, consisting of a large head, short neck, and plethoric frame, from the posture in which the body is found, and the appearances revealed by dissection, particularly in the head.

Death by asphyxia is more important to be understood. It is limited to cases where the heart's action is made to cease through the interruption of the respiration, or breathing. It is accomplished by all the possible modes of excluding atmospheric air from the lungs. The appearance in the body indicating death by asphyxia are: violent discolorations, eyes prominent, firm, and brilliant; cadaveric rigidity early and well marked; venous system of the brain full of blood; lungs distended with thick, dark-colored blood; liver, spleen, and kidneys gorged; right cavities of the heart distended, the left almost empty.

Death by burning presents a narrow white line surrounding the burnt spot; external to that, one of a deep-red tint, running by degrees into a diffused redness. This is succeeded in a few minutes by blisters filled with serum.

Death by cold leaves few traces in the system. Pale surface, general congestion of internal organs, sometimes effused serum in the ventricles of the brain.

Death by drowning is caused by asphyxia from suffocation by nervous, or syncopal asphyxia, or, by asphyxia from cerebral congestion. In the first, besides other indications of asphyxia, the face is pale or violet, a frothy foam at the mouth, froth in the larynx, trachea, and bronchi, water in the trachea, and sometimes in the ramifications of the bronchia, and also in the stomach. In the second, the face and skin are pale, the trachea empty, lungs and brain natural, and no water in the stomach. In the third, the usual indications of death by apoplexy are found on examination of the brain.

Death by hanging is produced by asphyxia suspending respiration by compressing the larynx, by apoplexy pressing upon the veins and preventing the returning of blood from the head, by fracture of the cervical vertebræ, laceration of trachea or larynx, or rupture of the ligaments of the neck, or by compressing the nerves of the neck. The signs and indications depend upon the cause of death. Among these are: face livid and swollen, lips distorted, eyelids swollen, eyes red and projecting, tongue enlarged, livid, compressed, froth about the lips and nostrils, a deep ecchymosed marked cord about the neck, sometimes ecchymosed patches on different parts of the body, fingers contracted or clenched, and the body retaining its animal heat longer than in other modes of death.

Death by lightning usually exhibits a contused or lacerated wound where the electric fluid en-

Death by strangulation presents much the same appearance as death by hanging, the mark of the cord being lower on the neck, more horizontal, and plainer and more distinctly ecchymosed.

Death by starvation produces general emaciation; eyes and cheeks sunken; bones projecting; face pale and ghastly; eyes red and open; skin, mouth, and fauces dry; gall bladder large and distended; body exhaling a fetid odor; heart, lungs, and large vessels collapsed; early commencement of putrefactive process.

DELIVERY. See BIRTH, above.

DELUSION is a diseased state of the mind, in which persons believe things to exist which exist only, or in the degree they are conceived of only, in their own imaginations, with a persuasion so fixed and firm that neither evidence nor argument can convince them to the contrary. The individual is, of course, insane. For example, should a parent unjustly persist, without the least ground, in attributing to his daughter a course of vice, and use her with uniform unkindness, there not being the slightest pretence or color of reason for the supposition, a just inference of insanity or delusion would arise in the minds of a jury; because a supposition long entertained and persisted in, after argument to the contrary, and against the natural affections of a parent, suggests that he must labor under some morbid mental delusion.[i]

DEMENTIA is a mild form of insanity characterized by mental weakness and decrepitude, and a total inability to reason correctly or incorrectly. The mind dwells only in the past, and the thoughts succeed one another without any obvious bond of association. Delusions, if they exist, are transitory, and leave no permanent impression; and for everything recent the memory is exceedingly weak. In mania, the action of the mind is marked by force, hurry, and intensity; in dementia, by slowness and weakness. It is mostly the sequel of mania, of which, in fact, it is the natural termination. Occasionally it occurs in an acute form in young subjects; and here only it is curable. In old men, in whom it often occurs, it is called senile dementia, and it indicates the breaking down of the mental powers in advance of the bodily decay. It is this form of dementia only which gives rise to litigation; for in the others the incompetency is too patent to admit of question. It cannot be described by any positive characters, because it differs in the different stages of its progress, varying from simple lapse of memory to complete inability to recognize persons or things. And it must be borne in mind that often the mental infirmity is not so serious as might be supposed at first sight. Many an old man who seems to be scarcely conscious of what is passing around him, and is guilty of frequent breaches of decorum, needs only to have his attention aroused to a matter in which he is deeply interested, to show no lack of vigor or acuteness. In other words, the mind may be damaged superficially, while it may be sound at the core. And therefore it is that one may be quite oblivious of names and dates, while comprehending perfectly well his relations to others and the interests in which he was concerned. It follows that the impressions made upon casual or ignorant observers in regard to the mental condition are of far less value than those made upon persons who have been well acquainted with his habits and have had occasion to test the vigor of his faculties.

The wills of old men are often contested on the ground of senile dementia, and the conflicting testimony of observers, the proofs of foreign influence, and the indications of mental capacity all combine to render it no easy task to arrive at a satisfactory conclusion. The only general rule of much practical value is that competency must be always measured, not by any fancied standard of intellect, but solely by the requirements of the act in question. A small and familiar matter would require less mental power than one complicated in its details and somewhat new to the testator's experience. Less capacity would be necessary to distribute an estate between a wife and child than between a multitude of relatives with unequal claims upon his bounty. Such is the principle; and the ends of justice cannot be better served than by its correct and faithful application. Of course, there will always be more or less difficulty; but generally, by discarding all legal and metaphysical subtleties and following the leading of common sense, it will be satisfactorily surmounted.

The legal principles by which the courts are governed are not essentially different whether the mental incapacity proceed from dementia or mania. If the will coincides with the previously expressed wishes of the testator, if it recognizes the claims of those who stood in near relation to him, if it shows no indications of undue influence—if, in short, it is a rational act rationally done—it will be established, and very properly so, though there may have been considerable impairment of mind.[j] See INSANITY, below.

DRUNKENNESS is the condition of a person who is under the immediate influence of intoxicating liquors.

This condition presents various degrees of intensity, ranging from a simple exhilaration to a state of utter unconsciousness and insensibility. In the popular phrase, the term drunkenness is applied only to those degrees of it in which the mind is manifestly disturbed in its operations. In the earlier stages it frequently happens that the mind is not only not disturbed, but acts with extraordinary clearness, promptitude, and vigor. In the latter the thoughts obviously succeed one another without much relevance or coherence, the perceptive faculties are active, but the impressions are misconceived, as if they passed through a distorting medium, and the reflective powers cease to act with any degree of efficiency. Some of the intermediate stages may be easily recognized; but it is not always possible to fix upon the exact moment when they succeed one another. In some persons peculiarly constituted, a fit of intoxication presents few if any of these successive stages, and the mind rapidly loses its self-control, and for the time is actually frenzied, as if in a maniacal paroxysm, though the amount of the drink may be comparatively small. The same phenomenon is observed sometimes in persons who have had some injury of the head, who are deprived of their reason by the slightest indulgence.

The habitual abuse of intoxicating drinks is usually followed by a pathological condition of the brain, which is manifested by a degree of intellectual obtuseness, and some insensibility to moral distinctions once readily discerned. The mind is more exposed to the force of foreign influences, and more readily induced to regard things in the light to which others have directed them. In others it produces a permanent mental derangement, which, if the person continues to indulge, is easily mistaken by common observers for the immediate effects of hard drinking. These two results—the mediate and the immediate effects of drinking—may co-exist; but it is no less necessary to distinguish them from each other, because their legal consequences may be very different. Moved by the latter, a person goes into the street and abuses or assaults his neighbors; moved by the former, the same person makes his will, and cuts off those who have the strongest claims upon his bounty with a shilling. In a judicial investigation, one class of witnesses will attribute all his extravagances to drink, while another will see nothing in them but the effect of insanity. The medical jurist should not be misled by either party, but be able to refer each particular act to its proper source.

Another remarkable form of drunkenness is called dipsomania. Rather suddenly, and perhaps without much preliminary indulgence, a person manifests an insatiable thirst for strong drink, which no considerations of propriety or prudence can induce him to control. He generally retires to some secluded place, and there, during a period of a few days or weeks, he swallows enormous quantities of liquor, until his stomach refuses to bear any more. Vomiting succeeds, followed by sickness, depression, and disgust for all intoxicating drinks. This affection is often periodical, the paroxysms recurring at periods varying from three months to several years. Sometimes the indulgence is more continuous and limited, sufficient, however, to derange the mind, without producing sickness, and equally beyond control. Dipsomania may result from moral causes, such as anxiety, disappointment, grief, sense of responsibility; or physical, consisting chiefly of some anomalous condition of the stomach.[k]

The common law shows but little disposition to afford relief, either in civil or criminal cases, from the immediate effects of drunkenness. It has never considered drunkenness alone as a sufficient reason for invalidating any act. When carried so far as to deprive the party of all consciousness, strong presumption of fraud is raised; and on that ground courts may interfere.[l] Drunkenness in such a degree as to render the testator unconscious of what he is about, or less capable of resisting the influence of others, avoids a will.[m] In action for torts, drunkenness is not regarded as a reason for mitigating damages.[n] And courts of equity decline to interfere in favor of parties pleading intoxication in the performance of a civil act.[o] The law does, however, recognize two kinds of inculpable drunkenness, viz.: that which is produced by the "unskilfulness of his physician," and that which is produced by the "contrivance of enemies."[p] To this may be added cases where a party drinks no more liquor than he has habitually used without being intoxicated, and which exerts an unusually potent effect on the brain in consequence of certain pathological conditions.[q]

EMISSION is the act of sending out or throwing from the body any matter whatever, as the emission of urine, emission of semen, etc. Emission is not necessary in the commission of a rape to complete the offence.[r] It is, however, essential in the offence of sodomy.[s]

EPILEPSY is the falling sickness; so called because the patient falls suddenly to the ground; it is a disease characterized by general muscular agitation occasioned by clonic spasms (that is, spasms in which the muscles, or muscular fibres, contract and relax alternately in quick succession, producing the appearance of agitation without sensation or consciousness, and commonly recurring at intervals.) When long continued and violent, this disease is very apt to end in dementia. It gradually destroys the memory, and impairs the intellect, and is one of the causes of an unsound mind.[t]

FŒTICIDE is the act by which a criminal abortion is produced.[u]

FŒTUS is the human being from the time its parts are distinctly formed until its birth; an unborn child; an infant in its mother's womb.

Until about the middle of the fourth month it is called embryo. At that time the development of the principal organs begins to be evident and they present something of their mature form.

Although it is often important to know the age of the fœtus, there is great difficulty in ascertaining the fact with the precision required in courts of law. Nothing on this subject can be learned solely from its weight, size, or progress towards maturity.

The great difference between children at birth, as regards their weight and size, is an indication of their condition while within the womb, and is a sufficient evidence that nothing can be decided as to the age of the fœtus by its weight and size at different periods of its existence.

Thousands of healthy infants have been weighed immediately after birth, and the extremes have been found to be two and eighteen pounds. It is very rare indeed to find any weighing as little as two pounds, but by no means uncommon to find them weighing four pounds. So it is with the length, which varies as much as that of the adult does from the average height of the race.

Neither can anything positive be learned from the progress of development; for although the condition of the bones, cartilages, and other parts will generally mark with tolerable accuracy the age of a healthy fœtus, yet an uncertainty will arise when it is found to be unhealthy. It has been clearly proved, by numerous dissections of new-born children, that the fœtus is subject to diseases which interfere with the proper formation of parts, exhibiting traces of previous departure from health, which had interfered with the proper formation of parts and arrested the process of development.

Interesting as the different periods of development may be to the philosophical inquirer, they cannot be of much value in legal inquiries, from their extreme uncertainty in denoting precisely the age of the fœtus by unerring conditions.

GESTATION is the period during which a woman carries young in her womb, from conception to delivery; it is pregnancy. This directly involves the question of the duration of pregnancy, questions concerning which most frequently occur in cases of contested legitimacy. That which is termed the usual period of pregnancy is ten lunar months, forty weeks, two hundred and eighty days, equal to about nine calendar months and one week. One question that has here been much discussed is whether the period of gestation has a fixed limit, or is capable of being contracted or protracted beyond the usual term. Many have claimed that the laws of nature on this subject are immutable, and that the fœtus, at a fixed period, has received all the nourishment of which it is susceptible from the mother, and becomes as it were a foreign body. Its expulsion is, therefore, a physical necessity. Others claim, and with stronger reasons, that as all the functions of the human body that have been carefully observed are variable, and sometimes within wide limits, and as many observations and experiments in reference to the cow and horse have established the fact that in the period of utero-gestation there is more variation with them than in the human species, there should remain no doubt that this period in the latter is always liable to variation. There are some women to whom it is peculiar always to have the normal time of delivery anticipated by two or three weeks, so that they never go beyond the end of the thirty-seventh or thirty-eighth week, for several pregnancies in succession.[v] So, also, there are many cases establishing the fact that the usual period is sometimes exceeded by one, two, or more weeks, the limits of which it is difficult or impossible to determine. Lord Coke seems inclined to adopt a peremptory rule that forty weeks is the longest time allowed by law for gestation.[w] But although the law of some countries prescribes the time from conception within which the child must be born to be legitimate, that of England and America fixes no precise limit, but admits the possibility of the birth's occurring previous or subsequent to the usual time. The following are cases in which this question will be found discussed.[x] See BIRTH, above; PREGNANCY, below.

GOUT is an inflammation of the fibrous and ligamentous parts of the joints; it is a chronic disease occurring by paroxysms; the paroxysms exacerbating (increasing its violence) and remitting. It consists essentially in a perfectly specific and topical (local) inflammation, having its regular seat in the largest joint of the great toe; and an equally specific and peculiar constitutional febrile (fever) affection. The forms of this disease are very irregular, numerous, and various. In cases of insurance on lives, when there is warranty of death, a man subject to gout is capable of being insured, if he has no sickness at the time to make it an unequal contract.[y]

HALLUCINATION is the faulty sense of erroneous imagination. Hallucinations of the senses arise from some defect in the organs of sense, or from some unusual circumstances attending the object. They are sometimes symptoms of general disease, as in fevers. Maniacal hallucinations arise from some imaginary or mistaken idea; similar hallucinations occur in revery. This state of the mind is sometimes called delusion, or waking dreams. An attempt has been made to distinguish hallucinations from illusions; the former are said to be dependent upon the state of the intellectual organs, and the latter on that of sense.[z] An instance is given of a temporary hallucination of Ben Jonson. He told a friend that he had spent many a night in looking at his great toe, about which he had seen Turks and Tartars, Romans and Carthagenians, fight in his imagination.[a] This example is unfair both to Jonson and the reader, for it seems tortured out of merely casual remarks of this eminent poet. If, instead of being temporary, this affection is permanent, then it may be considered insanity.

HERMAPHRODITES are human beings who have in appearance the sexual organs of both sexes, having the parts of generation of both male and female. Hermaphrodites are adjudged to belong to that sex which prevails in them.[b] The several characteristics of the human species are widely separated, and the two sexes are never, perhaps, united in the same individual.[c] Cases of malformation, however, sometimes are found, in which it is very difficult to decide to which sex the person belongs.[d]

HUNGER. See DEATH FROM, above.

IDIOCY is a natural defect of the understanding; a form of insanity resulting either from congenital (natural) defect or some obstacle to the development of the faculties in infancy. It always implies some defect or disease of the brain, which is generally smaller than the standard size and irregular in its shape and proportions. Occasionally the head is unnaturally large, being distended by water. The senses are very imperfect at best, and one or more are often entirely wanting. None can articulate more than a few words; while many utter only cries or muttered sounds. Some make known their wants by signs or sounds which are intelligible to those who have charge of them. The head, the features, the expression, the movements, all convey the idea of extreme mental deficiency. The reflective faculties are entirely wanting, whereby they are utterly incapable of any effort of reasoning. The perceptive faculties exist in a very limited degree, and hence they are rendered capable of being improved somewhat by education, and redeemed, in some measure, from their brutish condition. They have been led into habits of propriety and decency, have been taught some of the elements of learning, and have learned some of the coarser industrial occupations. The moral sentiments, such as self-esteem, love of approbation, veneration, benevolence, are not unfrequently manifested; while some propensities, such as cunning, destructiveness, sexual impulse, are particularly active.

In some parts of Europe a form of idiocy prevails endemically (in a manner peculiar to a people or nation), called cretinism. It is associated with disease or defective development of other organs besides the head. Cretins are short in stature, their limbs are attenuated, the belly tumid, the neck thick. The muscular system is feeble, and their voluntary movements restrained and undecided. The power of language is very imperfect, if not entirely wanting. In the least degraded forms of this disease, the perceptive powers may be somewhat developed, and the individual may evince some talent at music or construction. In Switzerland they make parts of watches. Unlike idiocy, cretinism is not congenital, but is gradually developed in the early years of childhood. It is owing chiefly to atmospherical causes, and is transmitted from one generation to another. Both idiocy and cretinism exhibit various degrees of mental deficiency, but they never approximate to any description of men supposed to be rational, nor can any amount of education efface the chasm which separates them from their better-endowed fellow-men. The older law-writers, whose observation of mental manifestations was not very profound, thought it necessary to have some test of idiocy; and accordingly Fitzherbert says, "If he have sufficient understanding to know and understand his letters, and to read by teaching or information, he is not an idiot."[e] Again, he says, "A man is not an idiot if he hath any glimmering of reason, so that he can tell his parents his age, or the like common matters." The inference was, no doubt, that such a man is responsible for his criminal acts. At the present day such an idea would not be entertained for a moment, nor are we aware of any case on record of an idiot suffering capital punishment. Of course, they are totally incapable of any civil acts; but in this country—in some of the States, at least—they would not be debarred from exercising the right of suffrage. See INSANITY, below.

ILLUSION is deceptive appearance; it is a species of mania, in which the sensibility of the nervous system is altered, excited, perverted, or weakened. The patient is deceived by the false appearance of things, and his reason is not sufficiently active and powerful to correct the error; and this last particular is what distinguishes the sane from the insane. Illusions are not unfrequent in a state of health, but reason corrects the errors and dissipates them. A square tower, seen from a distance, may appear round, but on approaching it the error is corrected. A distant mountain may be taken for a cloud, but as we approach we discover the truth. To a person in the cabin of a vessel under sail, the shore appears to move; but reflection and a closer examination soon destroy this illusion. An insane individual is mistaken on the qualities, connections, and causes of the impressions he actually receives, and he forms wrong judgments as to his internal and external sensations; and his reason does not correct the error.[f] See HALLUCINATION, above.

IMBECILITY is weakness; want of strength; feebleness of body and mind; not possessing the vigor that usually belongs to men, and which is necessary to the due performance of the functions of the body and intellect. It may be natural, or induced by violence or disease. It may be congenital (natural) or resulting from an obstacle to the development of the faculties, supervening in infancy.

Generally, it is manifested both in the intellectual and moral faculties; but occasionally it is limited to the latter, the former being but little, if at all, below the ordinary standard. Hence it is distinguished into intellectual and moral. In the former there are seldom any of the repulsive features of idiocy, the head, face, limbs, movements, being scarcely distinguishable, at first sight, from those of the race at large. The senses are not manifestly deficient, nor the power of articulation; though the use of language may be very limited. The perceptive faculties exhibit some activity; and thus the more obvious qualities of things are observed and remembered. Simple industrial operations are well performed, and, generally, whatever requires but little intelligence is readily accomplished. Occasionally a solitary faculty is prominently, even wonderfully developed,—the person excelling, for instance, in music, in arithmetical calculations, or mechanical skill, far beyond the ordinary measure. For any process of reasoning, or any general observation or abstract ideas, imbeciles are totally incompetent. Of law, justice, morality, property, they have but a very imperfect notion. Some of the affective faculties are usually active, particularly those which lead to evil habits, thieving, incendiarism, drunkenness, homicide, assaults on women.

The kind of mental defect here mentioned is universal in imbecility, but it exists in different degrees in different individuals, some being hardly distinguishable, at first sight, from ordinary men of feeble endowments, while others encroach upon the line which separates them from idiocy.

The various grades of imbecility, however interesting in a philosophical point of view, are not very closely considered by courts. They are governed in criminal cases solely by their tests of responsibility, and in civil cases by the amount of capacity, in connection with the act in question, or the abstract question of soundness or unsoundness.

Touching the question of responsibility, the law makes no distinction between imbecility and insanity.[a]

In civil cases, the effect of imbecility is differently estimated. In cases involving the validity of the contracts of imbecile persons, courts have declined to gauge the measure of their intellects, the only question with them being one of soundness or unsoundness, and "no distinction being made between important and common affairs, large or small property."[b]

Courts of equity, also, have declined to invalidate the contracts of imbeciles, except on the ground of fraud.[c] Of late years, however, courts have been governed by other considerations. If the contract were for necessaries, or showed no mark of fraud or unfair advantage, or if the other party, acting in good faith and ignorant of the other's mental infirmity, cannot be put into statu quo, the contract is valid.[d]

The same principles have governed the courts in cases involving the validity of the marriage contract. If suitable to the condition and circumstances of the party, and manifestly tending to his benefit, it has been confirmed, notwithstanding a considerable degree of incompetency. If, on the other hand, it has been procured by improper influences, manifestly for the advantage of the other party, it has been invalidated.[e] The law has always showed more favor to the wills of imbeciles than to their contracts. "If a man be of a mean understanding, neither of the wise sort nor of the foolish, but indifferent, as it were, betwixt a wise man and a fool—yea, though he rather incline to the foolish sort, so that for his dull capacity he might worthily be called grossum caput (a dull pate), or a dunce—such a one is not prohibited to make a testament."[x] Whether the testament be established or not, depends upon the circumstances of the case; and the English ecclesiastical courts have always assumed a great deal of liberty in their construction of these circumstances. The general principle is that if the will exhibits a wise and prudent disposition of property, and is unquestionably the will of the testator, and not another's, it should be established in the face of no inconsiderable deficiency.[f] Very different views prevailed in a celebrated case in New York.[g] The mental capacity must be equal to the act; and if that fact be established, and no unfair advantage have been taken of the mental deficiency, the will, the marriage, the contract, or whatever it may be, is held to be valid.

The term moral imbecility is applied to a class of persons who, without any considerable, or even appreciable, deficiency of intellect, seem to have never been endowed with the higher moral sentiments. They are unable to appreciate fully the distinctions of right and wrong, and, according to their several opportunities and tastes, they indulge in mischief as if by an instinct of their nature. To vice and crime they have an irresistible proclivity, though able to discourse on the beauties of virtue and the claims of moral obligation. While young, many of them manifest a cruel and quarrelsome disposition, which leads them to torture brutes and bully their companions. They set all law and admonition at defiance, and become a pest and a terror to the neighborhood. It is worthy of notice, because the fact throws much light on the nature of this condition, that a very large proportion of this class of persons labor under some organic defect. They are scrofulous, rickety, or epileptic, or, if not obviously suffering from these diseases themselves, they are born of parents who did. Their progenitors may have been insane, or eccentric, or highly nervous, and this morbid peculiarity has become, unquestionably, by hereditary transmission, the efficient cause of the moral defect under consideration. Thus lamentably constituted, wanting in one of the essential elements of moral responsibility, they are certainly not fit objects of punishment; for though they may recognize the distinctions of right and wrong in the abstract, yet they have been denied by nature those faculties which prompt men more happily endowed to pursue the one and avoid the other. In practice, however, they have been regarded with no favor by the courts.[h] See INSANITY, below.

IMPOTENCE is the incapacity for copulation or for propagating the species. It differs from sterility, though these terms have been used synonymously. Impotence may be considered as accidental or temporary, curable or incurable. Absolute or incurable impotence is that for which there is no known relief, principally originating in some malformation or defect of the genital organs. Where this defect existed at the time of marriage and was incurable, by the ecclesiastical law and the law of many of the States, the marriage may be declared void from the beginning.[i] But the party naturally impotent cannot allege that fact for the purpose of obtaining a divorce.[j]

INFANTICIDE is the murder of a new-born infant. It is distinguished from abortion and fœticide, which is the destruction of life while in the mother's womb. The criminal modes most commonly resorted to to destroy the life of an infant are: 1, suffocation; 2, drowning; 3, cold and exposure; 4, starvation; 5, wounds, fractures, and injuries of various kinds; a mode not unfrequently resorted to is the introduction of sharp-pointed instruments in different parts of the body; also, luxation and fracture of the neck, accomplished by forcibly twisting the head of the child, or pulling it backwards; 6, strangulation; 7, poisoning; 8, intentional neglect to tie the umbilical cord; and, 9, causing the child to inhale air deprived of its oxygen, or gases positively deleterious. All these modes of destroying life, together with the natural or accidental ones, will be found fully discoursed by the writers on medical jurisprudence.[k]

Birth. The crime of infanticide can be committed only after the child is wholly born.[l] This question involves an inquiry: 1. Into the signs of maturity, the data for which are, the length and weight of the fœtus, the relative position of the centre of its body, the proportional development of its several parts as compared with each other, especially of the head as compared with the rest of the body, the degree of growth of the hair and nails, the condition of the skin, the presence or absence of the membrana pupillaris, and, in the male, the descent or non-descent of the testicles.[m]

Life, etc. 2. Was it born alive? This second point presents an inquiry of great interest both to the legal and medical professions and to the community at large. In the absence of all direct proof, what organic facts proclaim the existence of life subsequent to birth? These facts are derived principally from the circulatory and respiratory systems. From the former the proofs are gathered—from the character of the blood, that which is purely fœtal being wholly dark, like venous blood, destitute of fibrous matter, and forming coagula much less firm and solid than that which has been subjected to the process of respiration; so, also, the coloring-matter is darker, and contains no phosphoric acid, and its proportion of serum and red globules is comparatively small. From the condition of the heart and blood vessels. The circulation anterior and subsequent to birth must necessarily be entirely different. That anterior, by means of the fœtal openings—the foramen ovale, the ductus arteriosus, and the ductus venosus—is enabled to perform its circuit without sending the entire mass of the blood to the lungs for the purpose of oxygenation. When the extra-uterine life commences, and the double circulation is established, these openings gradually close; so that their closure is considered clear evidence of life subsequent to birth.[n] From the difference in the distribution of the blood in the different organs of the body. The two organs in which this difference is most perceptible are the liver and the lungs —especially the latter. The circulation of the whole mass of the blood through the lungs distends and fills them with blood, so that their relative weight will be nearly doubled, and any incision into them will be followed by a free effusion.

From the respiratory system proofs of life subsequent to birth are derived. From the thorax. Its size, capacity, and arch are increased by respiration. From the lungs. They are increased in size and volume, are projected forward, become rounded and obtuse, of a pinkish-red hue, and their density is inversely as their volume.[o] The fact of the specific gravity of the lungs being diminished in proportion to their diminution in density gives rise to a celebrated test—the hydrostatic—the relative weight of the lungs with water.[p] The rule is, that lungs which have not respired are specifically heavier than water, and if placed within it will sink to the bottom of the vessel. If they have respired, their increase in volume and decrease in density render them specifically lighter than water, and when placed within it they will float. There are several objections to the sufficiency of this test; but it is fairly entitled to its due weight in the settlement of this question.[q] From the state of the diaphragm. Prior to respiration it is found high up in the thorax. The act of expanding the lungs enlarges and arches the thorax, and, by necessary consequence, the diaphragm descends.

The fact of life at birth being established, the next inquiry is, how long did the child survive? The proofs here are derived from three sources. The fœtal openings, their partial or complete closure. The more perfect the closure, the longer the time. The series of changes in the umbilical cord. These are: 1. The withering of the cord. 2. Its desiccation or drying. 3. Its separation or dropping off—occurring usually four or five days after birth. 4. Cicatrization of the umbilicus—occurring usually from ten to twelve days after birth. The changes in the skin, consisting in the process of exfoliation of the epidermis, which commences on the abdomen, and extends thence successively to the chest, groin, axillæ, interscapular space, limbs, and, finally, to the hands and feet.

INSANITY is unsoundness of the mind; derangement of the intellect; it is any degree of mental derangement, from a slight degree of wandering to distraction. This term is rarely used to express slight temporary delirium. Of late years this word has been used to designate all mental impairments and deficiencies formerly embraced in the terms lunacy, idiocy, and unsoundness of mind. Even to the middle of the last century the law recognized only two classes of persons requiring its protection on the score of mental disorder, viz.: lunatics and idiots. The former were supposed to embrace all who had lost the reason which they once possessed, and their disorder was called dementia accidentalis; the latter, those who had never possessed any reason, and this deficiency was called dementia naturalis. Lunatics were supposed to be much influenced by the moon; and another prevalent notion respecting them was that in a very large proportion there occurred lucid intervals, when reason shone out, for a while, from behind the cloud that obscured it, with its natural brightness. It may be remarked, in passing, that lucid intervals are far less common than they were once supposed to be, and that the restoration is not so complete as the descriptions of the older writers would lead us to infer. In modern practice, the term lucid interval signifies merely a remission of the disease, an abatement of the violence of the morbid action, a period of comparative calm; and the proof of its occurrence is generally drawn from the character of the act in question. It is hardly necessary to say that this is an unjustifiable use of the term, which should be confined to the genuine lucid interval that does occasionally occur. It began to be found at last that a large class of persons required the protection of the law, who were not idiots, because they had reason once, nor lunatics in the ordinary signification of the term, because they were not violent, exhibited no very notable derangement of reason, were independent of lunar influences, and had no lucid intervals. Their mental impairment consisted in a loss of intellectual power, of interest in their usual pursuits, of the ability to comprehend their relations to persons and things. A new term—unsoundness of mind—was, therefore, introduced to meet this exigency; but it has never been very clearly defined.

The law has never held that all lunatics and idiots are absolved from all responsibility for their civil or criminal acts. This consequence was attributed only to the severest grades of these affections,—to lunatics who have no more understanding than a brute, and to idiots who cannot number twenty pence nor tell how old they are. Theoretically the law has changed but little, even to the present day; but practically it exhibits considerable improvement: that is, while the general doctrine remains unchanged, it is qualified, in one way or another, by the courts, so as to produce less practical injustice.

Insanity implies the presence of disease or congenital defect in the brain, and though it may be accompanied by disease in other organs, yet the cerebral affection is always supposed to be primary and predominant. It is to be borne in mind, however, that bodily diseases may be accompanied, in some stage of their progress, by mental disorder which may affect the legal relations of the patient.

For all practical purposes, however, a definition is unnecessary, because the real question at issue always is, not what constitutes insanity in general, but wherein consists the insanity of this or that individual. Neither sanity nor insanity can be regarded as an entity to be handled and described, but rather as a condition to be considered in reference to other conditions. Men vary in the character of their mental manifestations, insomuch that conduct and conversation perfectly proper and natural in one might in another, differently constituted, be indicative of insanity. In determining, therefore, the mental condition of a person, he must not be judged by any arbitrary standard of sanity or insanity, nor compared with other persons unquestionably sane or insane. He can properly be compared only with himself. When a person, without any adequate cause, adopts notions he once regarded as absurd, or indulges in conduct opposed to all his former habits and principles, or changes completely his ordinary temper, manners, and dispositions—the man of plain practical sense indulging in speculative theories and projects, the miser becoming a spendthrift and the by itself alone, disconnected from the natural traits of character, could be regarded as conclusive proof of insanity. In accordance with this fact, the principle has been laid down, with the sanction of the highest legal and medical authority, that it is the prolonged departure, without any adequate cause, from the states of feeling and modes of thinking usual to the individual when in health, which is the essential feature of insanity.[r]

Insanity in some of its forms annuls all criminal responsibility, for there can be no crime nor offence if the accused were in a state of madness at the time of the act,[x] and in other forms disqualifies its subject from the performance of certain civil rights. A kind and degree of insanity which will not excuse a person for a criminal act may render him legally incompetent to the management of himself or his affairs.[s]

LUCID INTERVALS are those intervals bright with the natural radiance of intellect, not darkened or confused by delirium or madness; those intervals marked by the natural and regular operations of reason. It must not be a superficial tranquillity, a shadow of repose, but, on the contrary, a profound tranquillity, a real repose. "It must not be a mere ray of reason, which makes its absence more apparent when it is gone—not a flash of lightning, which pierces through the darkness only to render it more gloomy and dismal—not a glimmering which joins the night to the day,—but a perfect light, a lively and continued lustre, a full and entire day interposed between the two separate nights of the fury which precedes and follows it; and, to use another image, it is not a deceitful and faithless stillness which follows or forebodes a storm, but a sure and steadfast tranquillity for a time, a real calm, a perfect serenity. In fine, without looking for so many metaphors to represent our idea, it must not be a mere diminution, a remission of the complaint, but a kind of temporary cure, an intermission so clearly marked as in every respect to resemble the restoration of health."[t] So Lord Thurlow says, by a perfect interval, "I do not mean a cooler moment, an abatement of pain or violence, or of a higher state of torture,—a mind relieved from excessive pressure; but an interval in which the mind, having thrown off the disease, had recovered its general habit."[u] That there sometimes occurs an intermission in which the person appears to be perfectly rational, restored, in fact, to his proper self, is an unquestionable fact. It is equally true that they are of rare occurrence, that they continue but for a very brief period, and that with the apparent clearness there is a real loss of mental force and acuteness. In most cases of insanity there may be observed, from time to time, a remission of the symptoms, in which excitement and violence are replaced by quiet and calm, and, within a certain range, the patient converses correctly and properly. A superficial observer might be able to detect no trace of disease; but a little further examination would show a confusion of ideas and singularity of behavior, indicative of serious, though latent, disease. In this condition the patient may hold some correct notions, even on a matter of business, and yet be quite incompetent to embrace all the relations connected with a contract or a will, even though no delusion were present to warp his judgment. The revelations of patients after recovery furnish indubitable proof that during this remission of the symptoms the mind is in a state of confusion utterly unreliable for any business purpose.[v]

Of late years—whatever may have been the earlier practice—courts have not required that proof of a lucid interval which consists of complete restoration of reason, as described above. They have been satisfied with such proof as was furnished by the transaction in question. They cared less to consider the general state of mind than its special manifestations on a particular occasion. "The strongest and best proof that can arise as to a lucid interval is that which arises from the act itself;" if that "is a rational act, rationally done, the whole case is proved;"[w] "if she could converse rationally, that is a lucid interval."[x] This is a mere begging of the question, which is whether the act so rational and so rationally done—and not for that reason necessarily incompatible with insanity—was or was not done in a lucid interval. Persons very insane, violent, and full of delusions frequently do and say things evincing no mark of disease, while no one supposes that there is any lucid interval in the case. "It is clear that persons essentially insane may be calm, may do acts, hold conversations, and even pass in general society, as perfectly sane. It often requires close examination by persons skilled in the disorder, to discover and ascertain whether or not the mental derangement is removed and the mind become again perfectly sound. Where there is calmness, where there is rationality on ordinary subjects, those who see the party usually conclude that his recovery is perfect. . . . When there is not actual recovery, and a return to the management of himself and his concerns by the unfortunate individual, the proof of a lucid interval is extremely difficult."[y]

In criminal cases, the proof of a lucid interval must be still more difficult, in the very nature of the case. For although the mental manifestations may be perfectly right, it cannot be supposed that the brain has resumed its normal condition. In its outward expression, insanity, like many other nervous diseases, is characterized by a certain periodicity, whereby the prominent symptoms disappear for a time, only to return again within a very limited period. An epileptic, in the intervals between his fits, may evince to the closest observer not a single trace of mental or bodily disease; and yet, for all that, nobody supposes that he has recovered from his malady. No more does a lucid interval in a case of insanity imply that the disease has disappeared because its outward manifestations have ceased. There unquestionably remains an abnormal condition of the brain, by whatever name it may be called, whereby the power of the mind to sustain provocations, to resist temptations, or withstand any other causes of excitement, is greatly weakened.

Lucid intervals, properly so called, should not be confounded with those periods of apparent recovery which occur between two successive attacks of mental disease, nor with those transitions from one phasis of insanity to another, in which the individual seems to be in his natural condition. They may not be essentially different, but the suddenness and brevity of the former would be likely to impart to an act a moral complexion very different from that which it would bear if performed in the larger and more indefinite intermissions of the latter. Still, great forbearance should be exercised towards persons committing criminal acts while in any of these equivocal conditions. Those who have suffered repeated attacks of mental disease habitually labor under a degree of nervous irritability, which renders them peculiarly susceptible to many of those incidents and influences which lead to crime. The law may make no distinction, but executive and judicial tribunals are generally intrusted with discretionary powers, whereby they are enabled to apportion the punishment according to the moral guilt of the party.[z]

It is the duty of the party who contends for a lucid interval, to prove it; for a person once insane is presumed so, until it is shown that he had a lucid interval, or has recovered,[a] and yet "were they to run into nicety, proof might be demanded of one's insanity at the precise moment when the act was committed." See INSANITY, above.

MALPRACTICE is bad or unskilful practice; practice in a physician, or other professional person, whereby the health or members of the patient is injured; practice contrary to established rules. Ignorant malpractice is the administration of medicines calculated to do injury, which do harm, and which a well-educated and scientific man would know were not proper in the case.[b] This offence is a misdemeanor (whether it be occasioned by curiosity and experiment, or neglect), because it breaks the trust which the patient has put in a physician, and tends directly to his destruction.[c] Negligent malpractice comprehends those cases where there is no criminal or dishonest object, but gross negligence of that attention which the situation of the patient requires, as if a physician should administer medicines while in a state of intoxication from which injury would arise to his patient. Wilful malpractice takes place when the physician purposely administers or performs an operation which he knows and expects will result in the death to the individual under his care, as in the case of a criminal abortion.[d] To the performance of all surgical operations the surgeon is bound to bring at least ordinary skill and knowledge. He must apply without mistake what is settled in his profession. He must possess and practically exercise that degree and amount of knowledge and science which the leading authorities have pronounced as the result of their researches and experience up to the time, or within a reasonable time before the issue or question to be determined is made.[e]

Besides the criminal remedy for malpractice, the injured party may in many cases bring a civil action.[f] Civil cases of malpractice are of very frequent occurrence on those occasions where surgical operations are rendered necessary, or supposed to be so, by disease or injury, and are so performed as either to shorten a limb or render it stiff, or otherwise prevent the free, natural use of it, by which the party ever after suffers damages. This may embrace almost every kind of surgical operation; but nine-tenths of all such cases arise from amputations, fractures, or dislocation.[g]

MONOMANIA is the derangement of a single faculty, or with regard to a particular subject, the other faculties being in their natural and regular exercise. The most simple form of this disorder is that in which the patient has imbibed some single notion, contrary to common sense and to his own expense, and which seems, and no doubt really is, dependent on errors of sensation. It is supposed that the mind in other respects retains its natural intellectual powers; in order to avoid any civil act done, or criminal responsibility incurred, it must manifestly appear that the act in question was the effect of monomania.[i] See DELUSION, above.

PATHOLOGY is that branch of the medical science which explains the nature of diseases, their causes, and symptoms; or, the doctrine of the causes and nature of diseases, comprehending etiology (causes of disease), nosology (names and definitions of diseases, their class, genus, order, and species), symptomatology (symptoms of diseases), and therapeutics (the use of diet and of medicines). Some degree of the knowledge of pathology is of great consequence to the legal practitioner.[j]

PHYSICIAN is a person skilled in the art of medicine; one whose profession is to prescribe remedies for diseases; one lawfully engaged in the practice of medicine. Every person who offers his services to the public generally impliedly contracts with the employer that he is in possession of the ordinary skill and experience which are possessed by those who practice or profess to understand the art or science, and which are generally regarded by those most conversant with the profession as necessary to qualify one to engage in the business successfully. This ordinary skill may differ according to locality and means of information.[k] A physician's responsibility is the same when he is negligent as when he lacks ordinary skill, although the measure of indemnity and punishment may be different.[l] Although a physician is civilly and criminally responsible for his conduct while discharging the duties of his profession, he is in no sense a warrantor or insurer of a favorable result, without an express contract to that effect.[m]

POISON is any agent capable of producing a morbid, noxious, or dangerous effect upon any object endowed with life; of producing death. A substance having an inherent deleterious property which renders it, when taken into the system, capable of destroying life.[n]

Gaseous substances are classed as poisons.

Irritant poisons, when taken in ordinary doses, occasion speedily violent vomiting and purging, preceded, accompanied, or followed by intense pain in the abdomen, commencing in the region of the stomach. The corrosive poisons, as distinguished from those in a more limited sense termed irritant, generally produce their result more speedily, and give chemical indications; but every corrosive poison acts as an irritant in the sense here adopted.

Irritant poisons are:

1. MINERAL:—Metallic: Acids; alkalies and their salts; metalloids. Non-metallic: arsenic.
2. VEGETABLE:—Savin.
3. ANIMAL:—Cantharides.

Narcotic poisons act chiefly on the brain or spinal marrow. Either immediately or some time after the poison has been swallowed, the patient suffers from headache, giddiness, paralysis, stupor, delirium, insensibility, and, in some instances, convulsions.

Narcotic poisons are:

1. CEREBRAL:—Morphia.
2. SPINAL:—Strychnia.
3. CEREBRO-SPINAL:—Conia; aconitina.

The effects of one class are, however, sometimes produced by the other—more commonly as secondary, but sometimes even as primary, symptoms.

The evidence of poisoning, as derived from symptoms, is to be looked for chiefly in the suddenness of their occurrence; this is perhaps the most reliable of all evidence derived from symptoms in cases of criminal poisoning;[o] though none of this class of evidence can be considered as furnishing anything better than a high degree of probability; the regularity of their increase; this feature is not universal, and exists in many diseases; uniformity in their nature; this is true in the case of comparatively few poisons; the symptoms begin soon after a meal; but sleep, the manner of administration, or certain diseases, may affect this rule in the case of some poisons; when several partake at the same time of the same poisoned food, all suffer from similar symptoms;[p] the symptoms first appearing while the body is in a state of perfect health.[q]

Appearances which present themselves on post-mortem examinations are of importance in regard to some classes of irritant poisons;[r] but many poisons leave no traces which can be so discovered.

Chemical analysis often results in important evidence, by discovering the presence of poisons, which must then be accounted for; but a failure to detect it by no means proves that it has not been given.[s]

The evidence derived from circumstances differs in nothing in principle from that in case of commission of other crimes.

Homicide by poisoning is generally accidental (and therefore not murder), or deliberate.[t]

PREGNANCY is the state of a female who has within her ovary or womb a fecundated germ, which gradually becomes developed in the latter receptacle;[t] the state of a female who has conceived, or is with child.

The signs of pregnancy acquire a great importance from their connection with the subject of concealed, and also of pretended, pregnancy. The first may occur in order to avoid disgrace, and to accomplish in a secret manner the destruction of offspring. The second may be attempted to gratify the wishes of a husband or relations, to deprive the legal successor of his just claims, to gratify avarice by extorting money, and to avoid or delay execution.

These signs and indications have a twofold division. First, those developed through the general system, and hence termed constitutional; Second, those developed through the uterine system, termed local or sensible.

The first, or constitutional, indications regard—1. The mental phenomena, or change wrought in the temperament of the mother, evidenced by depression, despondency, rendering her peevish, irritable, capricious, and wayward; sometimes drowsiness and occasionally strange appetites and antipathies are present.

2. The countenance exhibits languor, and what the French writers term decomposition of features,—the nose becoming sharper and more elongated, the mouth larger, the eyes sunk and surrounded with a brownish or livid areola, and having a languid expression.

3. The vital action is increased; a feverish heat prevails, especially in those of full habit and sanguine temperament. The body, except the breasts and abdomen, sometimes exhibits emaciation. There are frequently pains in the teeth and face, heartburn, increased discharge of saliva, and costiveness.

4. The mammary sympathies give enlargement and firmness to the breasts; but this may be caused by other disturbances of the uterine system. A more certain indication is found in the areola, which is the dark-colored circular disk surrounding the nipple. This, by its gradual enlargement, its constantly deepening color, its increasing organic action evidenced by its raised appearance, turgescence, and glandular follicles, is justly regarded as furnishing a very high degree of evidence.

5. Irritability of stomach, evidenced by sickness at the stomach, usually in the early part of the day.

6. Suppression of the menses, or monthly discharge arising from a secretion from the internal surface of the uterus. This suppression, however, may occur from diseases or from a vitiated action of the uterine system.

The second, termed local or sensible signs and indications, arise mainly from the development of the uterine system consequent upon impregnation. This has reference—

1. To the change in the uterus itself. The new principle introduced causes a determination of blood to that organ, which develops at first at its fundus, second in its body, and lastly in its cervix or neck. The latter constantly diminishes until it has become almost wholly absorbed in the body of the uterus. The os uteri in its unimpregnated state feels firm, with well-defined lips or margins. After impregnation the latter becomes tumid, softer, and more elastic, the orifice feeling circular instead of transverse.

2. To the state of the umbilicus, which is first depressed, then pushed out to a level with the surrounding integuments, and at last, towards the close of the period, protruded considerably above the surface.

3. To the enlargement of the abdomen. This commences usually by the end of the third month, and goes on increasing during the period of pregnancy. This, however, may result from morbid conditions not affecting the uterus, such as disease of the liver, spleen, ovarian tumor, or ascites.

4. To quickening, as rendered evident by the fœtal motions. By the former we understand the feeling by the mother of the self-induced motion of the fœtus in utero, which occurs about the middle of the period of pregnancy. But as the testimony of the mother cannot be always relied upon, her interest being sometimes to conceal it, it is important to inquire what other means there may be of ascertaining it. These movements of the fœtus may sometimes be excited by a sudden application of the hand, having been previously rendered cold by immersion in water, on to the front of the abdomen. Another method is to apply one hand against the side of the uterine tumor, and at the same time to impress the opposite side quickly with the fingers of the other hand

But the most reliable means consists in the application of auscultation, or the use of the stethoscope. This is resorted to for the purpose of discovering—

First, The souffle, or placental sound.

Second, The pulsations of the fœtal heart. The first is a low, murmuring, or cooing sound, accompanied by a slight rushing noise, but without any sensation of impulse. It is synchronous with the pulse of the mother, and varies not in its situation during the course of the same pregnancy. Its seat in the abdomen does vary in proportion to the progressive advance of the pregnancy, and it is liable to intermissions.

The second is quite different in its characteristics. It is marked by double pulsations, and hence very rapid, numbering from one hundred and twenty to one hundred and sixty in a minute. These pulsations are not heard until the end of the fifth month, and become more distinct as the pregnancy advances. Their source being the fœtal heart, their seat will vary with the varying position of the fœtus. Auscultation, if successful, not only reveals the fact of pregnancy, but also the life of the fœtus.

There is still another indication of pregnancy; and that is a bluish tint of the vagina, extending from the os externum to the os uteri. It is a violet color, like lees of wine, and is caused by the increased vascularity of the genital system consequent upon conception. But any similar cause other than conception may produce the same appearance.

Independent of what may be found on this subject in works on medical jurisprudence and midwifery, that of Dr. Montgomery on the "Signs and Indications of Pregnancy" is the fullest and most reliable.

The laws relating to pregnancy concern the circumstances under and the manner in which the fact is ascertained. There are two cases where the fact whether a woman is or has been pregnant is important to ascertain. The one is when it is supposed she pretends pregnancy, and the other when she is charged with concealing it.

Pretended pregnancy may arise from two causes: the one when a widow feigns herself with child in order to produce a supposititious heir to the estate. The presumptive heir may in such case have a writ de ventre inspiciendo (of examining the abdomen), by which the sheriff is commanded to have such made, and the fact determined whether pregnancy exists or not, by twelve matrons, in the presence of twelve knights. If the result determine the fact of pregnancy, then she is to be kept under proper guard until she is delivered. If the pregnancy be negatived, the presumptive heir is admitted to the inheritance.[u] A practice quite similar prevailed in the civil law.

The second cause of pretended pregnancy occurs when a woman is under sentence of death for the commission of a crime. At common law, in case this plea be made before execution, the court must direct a jury of twelve matrons, or discreet women, to ascertain the fact, and if they bring in their verdict quick with child (for barely with child, unless it be alive in the womb, is not sufficient), execution shall be stayed, generally till the next session of the court, and so from session to session, till either she is delivered or proves by the course of nature not to have been with child at all.[v]

In Scotland, all that is necessary to be proved, to have execution delayed, is the fact of pregnancy, no difference being made whether she be quick with child or not. This is also the provision of the French penal code upon this subject. In this country, there is little doubt that clear proof that the woman was pregnant, though not quick with child, would at common law be sufficient to obtain a respite of execution until after delivery. The difficulty lies in making the proof sufficiently clear, the signs and indications being all somewhat uncertain, some of them wanting, all liable to variation, and conviction of the fact only fastening upon the mind when a number of them, inexplicable upon any other hypothesis, concur in that one result. In New York there is a statute regulation,[w] by which the sheriff is authorized to summon a jury of six physicians when a pregnant female convict is under sentence of death, and, if the inquisition by them executed find that such convict is quick with child, execution shall be suspended, and the inquisition transmitted to the governor; and whenever he shall become satisfied that she is no longer quick with child, he shall issue his warrant for her execution.

Pregnancy is seldom concealed except for the criminal purpose of destroying the life of the fœtus in utero, or of the child immediately upon its birth. Infant life is easily extinguished; while proof of the unnatural crime is hard to be furnished. This has led to the passage of laws, calculated to facilitate the proof and also to punish the very act of concealment of pregnancy and death of the child, when, if born alive, it would have been illegitimate.

PULSATION is the beating or throbbing of the heart, or of an artery in process of carrying on the circulation of the blood; beating without pain, as distinguished from verberation, or beating with pain.[x]

QUICKENING is becoming alive; the sensation a mother has of the motion of the child she has conceived. The period when quickening is first experienced varies from the tenth to the twenty-fifth, but is usually about the sixteenth week from conception.[y] It was formerly supposed that either the child was not alive until the time of quickening, or that it had acquired some new kind of existence that it did not possess before; hence the presumption of law that dates the life of the child from that time. The child is, in fact, alive from the first moment of conception, and, according to its age and state of development, has different modes of manifesting its life, and, during a portion of the period of gestation, by its motion. By the growth of the embryo the womb is enlarged until it becomes of too great a size to be contained in the pelvis; it then rises into the abdomen, when the motion of the fœtus is for the first time felt. Quickening, as indicating a distinct point in the existence of the fœtus, has no foundation in physiology; for it arises merely from the relation which the organs of gestation bear to the parts that surround them; it may take place early or late, according to the condition of these different parts, but not from any inherent vitality for the first time manifested by the fœtus.

As life, by law, is said to commence when a woman first becomes quick with child, so procuring an abortion after that period is a misdemeanor. Before this time, formerly the law did not interfere to prevent a pregnant woman convicted of a capital offence from being executed.[a] If, however, the humanity of the law of the present day would not allow a woman to be executed who is privément enceinte,[a] i. e., pregnant, although not quick, it would be but carrying out the same desire to interfere with long-established rules, to hold that the penalty for procuring abortion should also extend to the whole period of pregnancy.

SOMNAMBULISM is the act or practice of walking in sleep; sleep-walking. The mental condition of this affection is not very unlike that of dreaming. Many of their phenomena are the same; and the former differs from the latter chiefly in the larger number of the functions involved in the abnormal process. In addition to the mental activity common to both, the somnambulist enjoys the use of his senses in some degree, and the power of locomotion. He is thereby enabled to perform manual operations as well, frequently, as in his waking state. The farmer goes to his barn and threshes his grain; the house-servant lights a fire and prepares the breakfast for the family; and the scholar goes to his desk and writes or reads. Usually, however, the action of the senses is more or less imperfect, many of the impressions being incorrectly or not at all perceived. The person walks against a wall, or stumbles over an object in his path; he mistakes some projection for a horse, strides across it, and imagines himself to be riding; he hears the faintest sound connected with what he is doing, while the voices of persons near him, even the blast of a trumpet, are entirely unnoticed. Occasionally the power of the senses is increased to a degree unknown in the waking state. For the most part the operations of the somnambulist consist in getting up while asleep, groping about in the dark, endeavoring to make his way out of the house through doors or windows, making some inarticulate sounds, perhaps, and all the while unconscious of persons or things around him. The power of the perceptive faculties, as well as that of the senses, is sometimes increased in a wonderful degree.

The somnambulist always awakes suddenly, and has but a faint conception, if any, of what he has been thinking and doing. If conscious of anything, it is of an unpleasant dream imperfectly remembered. This fact, not being generally known, will often enable us to detect simulated somnambulism. If the person on waking continues the same train of thought and pursues the same plans and purposes which he did while asleep, there can be no doubt that he is feigning the affection. When a real somnambulist, for some criminal purpose, undertakes to simulate a paroxysm, he is not at all likely to imitate one of his own previous paroxysms, for the simple reason that he knows less than others how he appeared while in them. If, therefore, somnambulism is alleged in any given case, with no other proof than the occurrence of former paroxysms unquestionably genuine, it must be viewed with suspicion if the character of the alleged paroxysm differs materially from that of the genuine ones. In one way or another, a case of simulation would generally be detected by means of a close and intelligent scrutiny, so difficult is it to imitate that mixture of consciousness and unconsciousness, of dull and sharp perceptions, which somnambulism presents. The history of the individual may throw some light on the matter. If he has had an opportunity of witnessing the movements of a somnambulist in the course of his life, this fact alone would rouse suspicion, which would be greatly increased if the alleged paroxysm presented many traits like those of the paroxysms previously witnessed.

The legal consequences of somnambulism should be precisely those of insanity, which it so nearly resembles. The party should be exempt from punishment for his criminal acts, and be held amenable in damages for torts and trespasses. The only possible exception to this principle is to be found in those cases where the somnambulist, by meditating long on a criminal act while awake, is thereby led to commit it in his next paroxysm. Such being generally the fact, too much indulgence ought not to be shown to the criminal acts of the somnambulist.[b] But this is rather refined and hazardous speculation, and seems like punishing men solely for bad intentions, because the acts, though ostensibly the ground of punishment, are actually those of a person deprived of his reason. The truth is, however, that criminal acts have been committed in a state of somnambulism by persons of irreproachable character.[c]

STERILITY is barrenness; unfruitfulness; inability to produce young; inability to impregnate or conceive. When incurable at the time of marriage, and arising from impotency, it is a good cause for dissolving a marriage.[d] See IMPOTENCY, above.

SUICIDE is self-destruction; self-murder; the act of designedly destroying one's own life. To constitute suicide, the person must be of years of discretion, and of sound mind.[e] This was once regarded by the common law as exclusively a felonious act; of late, however, it has been often treated as the result of insanity, to be followed by all the legal consequences of that disease, so far as it is practicable. That suicide may be committed by a person in the full enjoyment of his reason there can be no doubt; nor can there be any doubt that it is often the result of unquestionable insanity. Between the two kinds of suicide here indicated, the medical jurist is obliged to discriminate, and in performing this duty the facts on the subject should be carefully considered.

The instinct of self-preservation is not so strong as to prevent men entirely from being tired of life and seeking their own destruction. They may have exhausted all their sources of enjoyment, their plans of business or of honor may have been frustrated, poverty or dishonor may be staring them in the face, the difficulties before them may seem utterly insurmountable, and, for some reason like these, they calmly and deliberately resolve to avoid the evil by ending their life. The act may be unwise and presumptuous, but there is in it no element of disease. On the other hand, it is well known that suicidal desires are a very common trait of insanity—that a large proportion of the insane attempt or meditate self-destruction. It may be prompted by a particular delusion, or by a sense of irresistible necessity. It may be manifested in the shape of a well-considered, persistent intention to seize upon the first opportunity to terminate life, or of a blind, automatic impulse acting without much regard to means or circumstances. As the disease gives way and reason is restored, this propensity disappears, and the love of life returns.

Besides these two forms of the suicidal propensity, there are other phases which cannot be referred with any degree of certainty to either of them. Persons, for instance, in the enjoyment of everything calculated to make life happy, and exhibiting no sign of mental disease, deliberately end their days. Another class, on approaching a precipice or a body of water, are seized with a desire, which may be irresistible, to take the fatal plunge. Many are the cases of children who, after some mild reproof, or slight contradiction, or trivial disappointment, have gone at once to some retired place and taken their lives. Every case must be judged by the circumstances accompanying it, always allowing the benefit of the doubt to be given to the side of humanity and justice.

By the common law suicide was treated as a crime, and the person forfeited all chattels, real or personal, and various other property.[f] This result can be avoided by establishing the insanity of the party; and in England, of late years, courts have favored this course whenever the legal effect of suicide would operate as a punishment. On the other hand, where the rights and interests of other parties are involved, the question of insanity is more closely scrutinized; and ample proof is required of the party on whom the burden of proof lies.

In regard to wills made just before committing suicide, the prevalent doctrine on this point, both in the United States and in England, is that the act of self-destruction may not necessarily imply insanity, and that if the will is a rational act, rationally done, the sanity of the testator is established.[g]

In life-insurance, in every case of intentional suicide, whatever may have been the mental condition, the policy becomes void.[h]

In cases of persons found dead, the cause may not be always perfectly obvious, and it becomes necessary to determine whether death was an act of suicide, or murder. This is often one of the most difficult questions in the whole range of medical jurisprudence, requiring for its solution the most profound knowledge of surgery and physiology, and great practical sagacity. In case of death caused by wounds, the kind and situation of the weapon, the extent, direction, and situation of the wounds, their connection with marks of blows, the temper and disposition of the person, all these and many other circumstances must be carefully and intelligently investigated. The frequency with which cases of suicide strongly resemble, in their external characters, those of murder, renders necessary the highest degree of skill and careful discrimination. If one counsels another to commit suicide, and is present at the consummation of the act, it is murder in the principal.[i]

SUPERFŒTATION is the conception of a child by a woman already pregnant with another, during the time of such pregnancy. It is a doctrine that seems to be established by numerous cases.[j]

WOUNDS are any lesions of the body whereby blood is drawn, including contusions, gunshot wounds, incisions, lacerations, punctures, etc. To constitute a wound the continuity of the skin must be broken,[k] and not merely the cuticle, but the true skin must be divided.[l] If the skin be broken the means by which it was done are not material. A kick may give a wound.[m] See DEATH, above.

MILITARY LAW is a system of regulations for the government of an army.[n] It is to be distinguished from martial law, which extends to all persons. Martial law supercedes and suspends all civil law; but military law is superadded and subordinate to the civil law.[o]

MUNICIPAL LAW is that governing a single nation, state, district, city, town, community, etc. It is distinguished from international law.

In Contracts. It is a general principle applying to contracts made, rights acquired, or acts done, relative to personal property, that the law of the place of making the contract or doing the act is to govern it, and determine its validity or invalidity, as well as the rights of parties under it in all matters touching the modes of execution and authentication of the form or instrument of contract; and also in relation to the use and meaning of the language in which it is expressed, the construction and interpretation of it, the legal duties and obligations imposed by it, and the legal rights and immunities acquired under it.[a] This principle, though general, does not, however, apply where the parties at the time of entering into the contract had the law of another kingdom in view, or where the law of place is in itself unjust, against good morals, or contrary to the public law of the State, as regarding the interests of religion or morality, or the general well-being of society.[b] And where the place of performance is different from the place where the contract is made, it is presumed the parties had the law of the former in mind.

The law of place is presumed to be the same as that of the forum unless shown to be otherwise.[c]

The Interpretation, Formalities, etc.; Construction and Obligation of Contracts, etc. The interpretation of contracts is to be governed by the law of the country where the contract was made.[d] The law of place governs as to the formalities and authentication requisite to the valid execution of contracts.[e] But in proving the existence of, or seeking remedies for the breach, as well as all questions relating to the competency of witnesses, course of procedure, etc., the law of the forum must govern.[f] The law of place governs as to the construction of contracts,[g] unless from their tenor it must be presumed they were entered into with a view to the laws of some other State.[h] This presumption arises where the place of performance is different from the place of making.[i] An obligation may be incurred under the law of place which there is no means of enforcing in that country, and which may be enforced in another country.[j]

A lien or privilege created by the law of place will generally be enforced wherever the property may be found,[k] but not necessarily in preference to claims arising under the law of the forum.[l]

A discharge from the performance of a contract under the law of place is a discharge everywhere.[m] A distinction is to be taken between discharging a contract and taking away the remedy for a breach.[n]

Contracts Made Partly in one State and Partly in Another. Where a contract is made partly in one country and partly in another, it is a contract of the place where the assent of the parties first concurs and becomes complete.[o] As between the place of making and the place of performance, where the place of performance is specified, the law of the place of performance governs as to obligation, interpretation, etc.[p] Where the contract is to be performed generally, the law of the place of making governs.[q] If the contract is to be performed partly in one state and partly in another, it will be affected by the law of both states.[r] In cases of indorsement of negotiable paper, every indorsement is a new contract, and the place of each indorsement is its place of contract.[s] The place of payment is the place of contract, however, as between indorsee and drawer.[t] The place of acceptance of a draft is regarded as the place of contract.[u]

The legality or illegality of a contract will be determined by the lex loci, unless it affects injuriously the public morals or rights, contravenes the policy, or violates a public law of the country where it is to be enforced.[v] A contract illegal by the law of the place of its making and performance will generally be held so everywhere.[w] A contract legal by the lex loci will be so everywhere,[x] unless:

1. It is injurious to public rights or morality.[y]

2. It contravenes the policy,[z] and it is generally held that the claims of citizens are to be preferred to those of foreigners in case of a conflict of rights. Assignments under the insolvent laws of a foreign state are usually held inoperative as against claims in the state in regard to personal property in the jurisdiction of the lex fori.[a]

3. Or violates a positive law of the lex fori. The application of the lex loci is a matter of comity, and that law must, in all cases, yield to the positive law of the place of seeking the remedy.[b]

Statutes of limitation apply to the remedy, but do not discharge the debt.[c]

The validity or invalidity of a contract as affected by the lex loci may depend upon the capacity of the parties, or the legality of the act to be done. The capacity of the parties as affected by questions of minority or majority, guardianship and other personal qualities or disabilities, is to be decided by the law of the place of making the contract.[d] Personal disqualifications not arising from the law of nature, but from positive law, and especially such as are penal, are strictly territorial, and are not to be enforced in any other country than where they originate.[e] Natural disabilities, such as insanity, imbecility, etc., are everywhere recognized, so that the question whether they are controlled by the lex loci or lex domicilli seems to be theoretic rather than practical.

IN TORTS. Damages for the commission of a tortuous act are to be measured by the law of the place where the act was done.[f]

PLACE OF SITUATION OF THE THING.

Lex rei sitæ is law of the place or situation of the thing.

It is the universal rule of the common law that any title or interest in land, or in other real estate, can only be acquired or lost agreeably to the law of the place where the same is situate,[g] and the law is the same in this respect in regard to all methods whatever of transfer, and every restraint upon alienation.[h] is that which is applicable to the future; it is used in contradistinction to retrospective. To be just a law ought always to be prospective.[i]

PROSPECTIVE LAW

REPORT LAW.

REPORTS are printed or written collections of accounts or relations of cases judicially argued and determined. Prior to the year 1800 there were but one or two American reports, while in England there were very many. In the jurisprudence of nearly every civilized country, the force of adjudicated precedents is to a greater or less degree acknowledged. But in no countries are they so deferentially listened to, and, indeed, so implicitly obeyed as in England and in those countries which, like our own, derive their systems of judicial government from her. The European systems are composed, much more than either ours or the English, of codes; and their courts rely far more than ours upon the opinions of eminent text writers. With us, we pay no implicit respect to anything but a "case in point," and, supposing the case to be by an authoritative court, when that is cited it is generally taken as conclusive on the question in issue. Hence both the English and American jurisprudence is filled with books of reports; that is to say, with accounts of cases which have arisen, and the mode in which they have been presented, considered, argued, and decided. It is of late years usual, in the United States at least, for the courts to write out their opinions and deliver them to the reporter, so that usually the opinion of the court is correctly given. Nothing can be so various, as respects their grade of merit, as the English reports prior to about the year 1776, and the lawyer should never rely upon any one of them without knowing the character of the volume which he cites. Great judicial mistakes have arisen, even with the most able courts, from want of attention to the different characters of the old reporters.[j]

RETROSPECTIVE LAW is that having reference to matters or things existing before its passage. Laws which operate upon some subject, contract, or crime which existed before their passage, are generally unjust, and are to a certain extent forbidden by that article of the Constitution of the United States which prohibits the passage of ex post facto laws, or laws impairing contracts. The right to pass retrospective laws, with the above exception, exists in the several States, according to their own constitutions; and they become obligatory if not prohibited by such constitutions.[d]

STATUTE LAW.

A STATUTE is a law established by the act of the legislative power. An act of the legislature. The written will of the legislature, solemnly expressed according to the forms necessary to constitute it the law of the State. This word is used to designate the written law in contradistinction to the unwritten law. See ante, COMMON LAW. An affirmative statute is one which is enacted in affirmative terms. Such a statute does not necessarily take away the common law.[e] If, for example, a statute without negative words declares that when certain requisites shall have been complied with, deeds shall have a certain effect as evidence, this does not prevent their being used in evidence, though the requisites have not been complied with, in the same manner as they might have been before the statute was passed.[f] Nor does such an affirmative statute repeal a precedent statute if the two can both be given effect.[g] A negative statute is one expressed in negative terms, and so controls the common law that it has no force in opposition to the statute.[h] A declaratory statute is one which is passed in order to put an end to a doubt as to what is the common law or the meaning of another statute, and which declares what it is and ever has been. A remedial statute is one which is made to supply such defects and abridge such superfluities in the common law as may have been discovered. The term "remedial statute" is also applied to those acts which give the party injured a remedy; and in some respects such statutes are penal.[i] A penal statute is one which commands or prohibits a thing, under a certain penalty.[j] A statute affixing a penalty to an act, though it does not in words prohibit it, thereby makes it illegal.[k] A perpetual statute is one for the continuance of which there is no limited time, although it be not expressly declared to be so. If a statute which did not itself contain any limitation is to be governed by another which is temporary only, the former will also be temporary and dependent upon the existence of the latter.[l] A temporary statute is one which is limited in its duration at the time of its enactment. It continues in force until the time of its limitation has expired, unless sooner repealed. A statute which by reason of its nature has only a single and temporary operation—e. g., an appropriation bill—is also called a temporary statute. Private or special statutes or acts are those of which will not take notice without pleading; such as concern only a particular species or person. Private statutes may be rendered public by being so declared by the legislature.[m] Private statutes will not bind strangers, though they should not contain any saving of their right. A general saving clause used to be inserted in all private bills; but it is settled that, even if such saving clause be omitted, the act will bind none but the parties. Public or general statutes are those of which the courts will take judicial notice without pleading or proof. They are either general or local—that is, have operation throughout the State at large, or within a particular locality. It is not easy to say what limitation will render an act local. Thus, it has been held that a public act relating to one county only is not local within the meaning of the constitutional provision which forbids enactments of local bills embracing more than one subject.[n]

It is a general rule that when the provisions of a statute is general, everything which is necessary to make such provision effectual is supplied by the common law,[o] and when a power is given by statute, everything necessary for making it effectual is given by implication.[p]

A statute which contravenes a provision of the constitution of a State by whose legislature it was enacted, or of the Constitution of the United States, is in so far void. The presumption, however, is that every State statute, the object and provision of which are among the acknowledged powers of the legislation, is valid and constitutional; and such presumption is not to be overcome unless the contrary is clearly demonstrated.[q] Where a part only of a statute is unconstitutional, the rest is not void if it can stand by itself.[r]

A statute is not to be deemed repealed, merely by the enactment of another statute on the same subject. There must be a positive repugnancy between the provisions of the new law and the old to work a repeal by implication; and even then the old law is repealed only to the extent of such repugnancy.[t] This rule is supported by a vast variety of cases. There is, however, a qualification to be observed in the case of a revised law. Where the new statute is in effect a revision of the old, it may be treated as superseding the former, though not expressly so declared.[u] A mere change of phraseology in the revision does not, however, necessarily imply a change in the law.[v] Where a new statute expressly repeals the former statute, and the new and the repeal of the old are to take effect at the same time, a provision in the old statute which is embodied in the new is deemed to have continued in force without suspension.[w] But it has been held, that where the new law does not go into effect until a time subsequent to that at which the repeal takes effect, such a provision is to be deemed repealed meantime.[x]

It is not to be presumed in the courts of any State, that statutes which have been enacted in that State have also been enacted in other States. The courts assume that the common law still prevails, unless it is shown to have been modified.[y]

CONSTRUCTION. Penal statutes are to be strictly construed. Remedial statutes are to be liberally construed.[z]

The apparent object of the legislature is to be sought for as disclosed by the act itself, the preamble in some cases, similar statutes relating to the same subject, the consideration of the mischiefs of the old law, and perhaps some other circumstances. All statutes are to be construed with reference to the provisions of the common law, and provisions in derogation of the common law are held strictly. In construing statutes of the various States or foreign countries, the Supreme Court of the United States adopts the construction put upon them by the courts of the State or country by whose legislature the statute was enacted; but this does not necessarily include subsequent variations of construction by such courts.[a]

PUNCTUATION is not to be regarded in construing a statute.[b]

LIENS. See title BAILMENTS; CONTRACTS; ETC.

A LIEN is a hold or claim which one person has upon the property of another as a security for some debt or charge. In every case in which property, either real or personal, is charged with the payment of a debt or duty, every such charge may be denominated a lien on the property.[w] It differs from an estate in or title to the property, as it may be discharged at any time by payment of the sum for which the lien attaches. It differs from a mortgage in the fact that the mortgage is made, and the property delivered, or otherwise, for the express purpose of security; while the lien attaches as incidental to the main purpose of the bailment; or, as in case of a judgment, by mere act of the law without any act of the party. In its more limited as well as commoner sense, the word lien indicates a mere right to hold the property of another as security; or it is the right which one person possesses, in certain cases, of detaining property placed in his possession belonging to another, until some demand which the former has upon it, is satisfied.[x] A qualified right which, in certain cases, may be exercised over the property of another.[y] A lien is a right to hold.[z] A lien in regard to personal property is a right to detain the property till some claim or charge is satisfied.[a] The right of retaining or continuing possession till the price is paid.[b] Common law lien, as distinguished from other classes, consists in a mere right to retain possession until the debt or charge is paid. A general lien is the right to retain the property of another on account of a general balance due from the owner.[c] Of course where a general lien exists a particular lien is included. A particular lien is the right to retain the property of another on account of labor employed or money expended on that specific property.[d] Particular liens constitute the oldest class of liens, and the one most favored by the common law.[e] But the courts ceased to originate liens at an early period,[f] while general liens have been looked upon with jealousy, being considered encroachments upon the common law, and founded solely in the usage of and for the benefit of trade. In cases of a factor an apparent exception exists, as he is allowed a lien on the proceeds of the goods sold, as well as on the goods themselves. But this seems to result from the relation of the parties and the purposes of the bailment; to effectuate which, and at the same time to give a security to the factor, the law considers the possession, or right to possession, of the proceeds the same thing as the possession of the goods themselves. Liens either exist by law, arise from usage, or are created by express agreement.

COMMON LAW LIENS.

Liens which exist by the common law generally arise in cases of bailment. Thus, a particular lien exists whenever goods are delivered to a tradesman for the execution of the purposes of his trade upon them.[g] And so, where a person is, from the nature of his occupation, under a legal obligation to receive and be at trouble or expense about the personal property of another, in every such case he is entitled to a particular lien upon it.[h] And sometimes a lien arises where there is strictly no bailment: thus, where a ship or goods at sea come into possession by finding, and he has been at some trouble or expense about them, he is entitled to retain the same until reimbursed his expenses. This applies only to the salvors of a ship and cargo preserved from peril at sea,[i] and in case of property on shore, where a specific reward is offered for the restoration,[j] and does not apply, generally, it is said, to things found upon land,[k] unless so made by custom or statute.

Liens which arise by usage are usually general liens, and the usage is either the general usage of trade, or the particular usage of parties.[l] The usage must be so general that the party delivering the goods may be presumed to have known it, and to have made the right of lien a part of the contract.[m] And the lien must be for a general balance arising from transactions of a similar character between the parties, and that the debt must have accrued in the business of the party claiming the lien,[n] and it seems that more decisive proof of general usage is required in those occupations in which the workmen are required to receive their employment when offered them, such as carriers.[o] But where a general lien has been once established, the courts will not allow it to be disturbed.[p]

In regard to a general lien arising from particular usage between the parties, proof of their having before dealt upon the basis of such a lien will be presumptive evidence that they continue to deal upon the same terms.[q] If a debtor, who has already pledged property to secure a loan, borrow a further sum, it will be understood that the creditor's lien is for the whole debt.[r]

Liens which arise from Express Agreement. A general or particular lien may be acquired in any case by the express agreement of the parties.[s] This generally happens when goods are placed in the hands of a person for the execution of some particular purpose upon them, with an express contract that they shall be considered as a pledge for the labor or expense which the execution of that purpose may occasion; or it exists where the property is merely pawned or delivered for bare custody to another, for the sole purpose of being a security for a loan made to the owner on the credit of it.[t] And if a number of tradesmen, not obliged by law to receive the goods of any one who offers for the purposes of their trade, agree not to receive goods unless they may be held subject to a general lien for the balance due them, and the bailor knows this, and leaves the goods, the lien attaches.[u] And the same is true, of course, of an individual under similar circumstances. But where the tradesman is obliged to receive employment from any one who offers, a mere notice will not be enough to give this lien with implied assent, but express assent must be shown.[v]

Liens which Exist in the Absence of any Special Agreement. Among the different classes who have liens by the common law, in the absence of any special agreement, are: Agisters of cattle have no lien.[w] Attorneys and solicitors have a lien upon the papers of their clients,[x] and also upon judgments obtained by them.[y] But this lien is subject to some restrictions.[z] Bailies for hire generally for work done by them.[a] Bankers have a lien on all securities left with them by their employers.[b] Clerks of courts have a lien on papers for their fees.[c] Common carriers for transportation of goods,[d] but not if the goods are taken tortuously from the owner's possession, where the carrier is innocent,[e] and on a passenger for his passage-money.[f] Part of the goods may be detained for the whole freight of goods belonging to the same person.[g] Factors and brokers have a lien on goods and papers[h] on part of the goods for the whole claim,[i] but only for such goods as come to them as factors.[j] Innkeepers may detain a horse for his keeping[k] if he belong to a guest,[l] but not sell him[m] unless authorized by statute, and then in the express mode provided; but cannot retake the horse after giving him up.[n] They may detain the goods of a traveler, but not of a boarder.[o] Their lien is a particular lien.[p] Pawnees from the very nature of their contract,[q] but only where the pawner (or pledgor) has authority to make such pledge.[r] A pledge, even where the pawnee is innocent, does not bind the owner, unless the pawner has authority to make the pledge.[s] The pawnee does not have a general lien.[t] Tailors have a particular lien.[u] Ven- dors of goods have a lien for the price so long as they retain possession.[v] Warehousemen have a particular lien.[w] So a wharfinger.[x]

General Requisites of a Valid Lien. In all these cases, to give rise to the lien there must have been a delivery of the property; it must have come into the possession of the party claiming the lien, or his agent.[y] A question may arise by whom the delivery is to be made. Where a person, in pursuance of the authority and directions of the owner of property, delivers it to a tradesman for the execution of the purposes of his trade upon it, the tradesman will not have a general lien against the owner for a balance due from the person delivering it, if he knew that the one delivering was not the real owner.[z] Thus, a carrier, who, by the usage of trade, is to be paid by the consignor, has no lien for a general balance against the consignee.[a] Nor can a claim against the consignee destroy the consignor's right of stoppage in transitu.[b] But a particular lien may undoubtedly be derived through the acts of agents acting within the scope of their employment.[c] And the same would be true of a general lien against the owner for a balance due from him.[d]

No lien exists where the party claiming it acquires possession by wrong[e] or by misrepresentation,[f] or by his unauthorized and voluntary act.[g] No lien exists where the act of the servant or agent delivering the property is totally unauthorized, and the pledge of it is tortious against the owner, whether delivered as a pledge or for the execution of the purposes of a trade thereupon.[h] A pledge, even when the pawnee is innocent, does not bind the owner unless the pawner had authority.[i]

A delivery by a debtor for the purpose of preferring a creditor will not be allowed to operate as a delivery sufficient for a lien to attach.[j]

Waiver of Lien. Possession is a necessary element of common law liens; and if the creditor once knowingly parts with that possession after the lien attaches, the lien is gone.[k] But there may be a special agreement extending the lien, though not to affect third persons.[l] The delivery may be constructive[m] and so may possession.[n] A lien cannot be transferred,[o] but property subject to a lien may be delivered to a third person, as to the creditor's servant with notice of the lien, so as to preserve the lien of the original creditor.[p] But it must not be delivered to the owner or his agent.[q] But if the property be of a perishable nature, possession may be given to the owner under proper agreements.[r] Neglect to insist upon a lien in giving reasons for a refusal to deliver property on demand, has been held a waiver.[s]

Where there is a special agreement made, or act done, inconsistent with the existence of the lien, such as an agreement to give credit, or where a distinct security is taken, or the possession of the property is acquired for another distinct purpose, and for that only, or where the property is attached by the creditor, no lien arises.[t] But such agreement must be clearly inconsistent with the lien.[u]

Rights, Uses, and Remedies under a Lien. The only remedy or use of the lien at common law is to allow the creditor to retain possession of the goods,[v] etc. And this he may do as against assignees of the debtor.[w]

MARITIME LIENS do not include or require possession. The word lien is used in maritime law, not in the strict legal sense in which we understand it in courts of common law, in which case there could be no lien where there was no possession, actual or constructive; but to express, as if by analogy, the nature of claims which neither presuppose nor originate in possession.[a] A distinction is made in the United States between qualified maritime liens, which depend upon possession, and absolute maritime liens, which do not require nor depend upon possession.[b]

Builders' lien may be placed on the common-law ground that a workman employing skill and labor on an article has a lien upon it;[c] and a lien for the purpose of finishing the ship where payments are made by instalments.[d] See MATERIAL MEN, below.

Collision. In case of collision the injured vessel has a lien upon the one in fault for the damage done;[e] and the lien lasts a reasonable time.[f]

Deposit of a bill of lading gives a lien for the amount advanced on the strength of the security.[g] See PART-OWNER, below.

Dead Freight. No lien exists for dead freight.[h] The lien attaches only for freight earned.[i] The lien is lost by a delivery of the goods,[j] but not if the delivery be involuntary, or procured by fraud.[k] So it is by stipulations inconsistent with its exercise,[l] as by an agreement to receive the freight at a day subsequent to the entire delivery of the goods—a distinction being, however, taken between the unloading or arrival of the ship, and the delivery of the goods.[m]

A third person cannot take advantage of the existence of such lien.[n] A vendor, before exercising right of stoppage in transitu, must discharge this lien by payment of freight.[o]

Master's Lien. In England, the master has no lien, at common law, on the ship for wages, nor disbursements.[p]

But, by the one hundred and ninety-first section of the English Merchant Shipping Act of 1854, it is provided that "Every master of a ship shall, so far as the case permits, have the same rights, liens, and remedies for the amount of his wages, which, by this act, or any law or custom, any seaman, not being a master, has for the money of his wages." This lien of the master on an English vessel may be reinforced in the admiralty courts of the United States.[q]

In the United States, he has no lien for his wages.[r] This does not apply to one not master in fact.[s] As to lien for disbursements.[t] He may be substituted if he discharge a lien.[u] But he has a lien on the freight for disbursements;[v] for wages in a peculiar case;[w] and on the cargo, where it belongs to the ship-owners.[x] He may, therefore, detain goods against the shipper or consignee, even after payment to owner, if the master give reasonable notice.[y] The master may retain goods till a contribution bond is signed.[z]

Material men have a lien by admiralty law. They are those whose trade it is to build, repair, or equip ships, or to furnish them with tackle and provisions necessary in any kind.[a] In regard to foreign ships, it has been lately held that material men have a lien on the ship only when the supplies were necessary, and could be obtained only on the credit of the ship.[b] The lien for repairs continues only as long as they retain possession, on domestic ships;[c] and is gone if possession is left.[d]

The several States of the United States are foreign to each other in this respect.

As to the order of precedence of these liens.[e] Admiralty formerly took jurisdiction of such liens, though not strictly maritime liens;[f] but this jurisdiction is now questioned,[g] if not denied.[h]

Giving credit will not be a waiver of a lien on a foreign ship, unless so given as to be inconsistent with the exercise of the lien.[i] See BUILDERS, ETC., above.

Owner of a ship has a lien on the cargo carried for freight earned, whether reserved by a bill of lading or not.[j]

This lien is, at most, only a qualified maritime lien.[k] The lien exists in case of a chartered ship[l] to the extent of the freight due under the bill of lading.[m] But if the charterer takes possession and management of the ship, he has the lien.[n] No lien for freight attaches before the ship has broken ground.[o] But see, as to the damages for removing goods from the ship before she sails.[p]

A part-owner, merely as such, has no lien whatever, but acquires such a lien when any of the elements of partnership or agency, with bailment upon which his lien may rest, enter into his relation with the other part-owners.[q]

A part-owner who has advanced more than his share towards building a vessel has no lien on her for such surplus,[r] and none, it is said, for advances on account of a voyage.[s]

That the relation of partners must exist to give the lien.[t]

And part-owners of a ship may become partners for a particular venture.[u]

The liens of part-owners and by deposit of a bill of lading are not maritime liens, however, and could not be enforced in admiralty.

Seamen's lien for wages attaches to the ship and freight, and the proceeds of both, and follows them into whosoever hands they come;[v] and lies against a part, or the whole, of the fund;[w] but not the cargo.[x] It applies to proceeds of a vessel sold under attachment of a State court.[y]

This lien of a seaman is of the nature of the privilegium of the civil law, does not depend upon possession, and takes precedence of a bottomry bond or hypothecation.[z] Taking the master's order does not destroy the lien.[a] Fishermen on shares have it, by statute. Generally, all persons serving in a way directly and materially useful to the navigation of the vessel.[b] A woman has it if she performs seaman's service.[c] It lies against ships owned by private persons, but not against government ships employed in the public service.[d]

A ship-broker, who obtains a crew, has been held to have a lien for his services, and advances for their wages.[e]

Shipper of goods has a lien upon the ship, for the value of the goods sent, which can be enforced in admiralty;[f] and, generally, every act of the master binds the vessel, if it be done within the scope of his authority,[g] where the possession of the master is not tortious, but under a color of right.[h] This does not apply to contracts of material men with the master of a domestic ship;[i] and the act must have been within the scope of the master's employment.[j] This lien follows the ship even in the hands of a purchaser, without notice before the creditor has had a reasonable opportunity to enforce his lien.[k] If the master borrow money for the ship's necessity, the lender has a lien on the ship for the amount.[l]

The ship's husband, if a partner, has a partner's lien; if not, he may have a lien in the proceeds of the voyage;[m] or of the ship herself, if sold, or on her documents, if any of these have come into his actual possession. And the lien applies to all disbursements and liabilities for the ship. But it is doubtful if his mere office gives him a lien.[n]

Stevedores have no lien.[o]

STATUTORY LIENS. The principal liens of this class are judgment liens, and the liens of builders and material men.

At common law a judgment is a lien upon real property from the time of its rendition.[p] A judgment is sometimes, though very rarely, a lien upon personal property.

Mechanics and material men in most of the States have a lien upon the property on which they bestow their labor, or contribute materials for repairs, or in the erection of buildings, etc.

LOST PAPERS.

WHEN AGREEMENTS, CONVEYANCES, DEEDS, WILLS, and the like have been lost, and it is desired to prove their contents, the party must prove that he has made diligent search, and in good faith exhausted all sources of information accessible to him. For this purpose his own affidavit is sufficient.[a] On being satisfied of this, the court will allow sccondary evidence to be given of its contents. Even a will proved to be lost may be admitted to probate upon secondary evidence.[b] But the fact of the loss must be proved by the clearest evidence, because it may have been destroyed by the testator with an intention to revoke.[c]

WHEN A BOND OR OTHER DEED was lost, formerly the obligee or plaintiff was compelled to go into equity to seek relief,[d] but now the loss of any paper other than a negotiable note will not prevent the plaintiff recovering at law as well as in equity.[e]

WHEN A NEGOTIABLE NOTE HAS BEEN LOST, the claimant must tender an indemnity to the debtor, and file his petition or complaint to compel payment.[f]

LOST PROPERTY.

RIGHTS AND DUTIES OF A FINDER. The finder is entitled to certain rights, and liable to duties which he is obliged to perform. This is a species of deposit, which, as it does not arise ex contractu, may be called a quasi deposit, and it is governed by the same general rules as common deposits. The finder is required to take the same reasonable care of the property found as any voluntary depositary ex contractu.[a]

The finder is not bound to take the goods he finds, yet when he does undertake the custody, he is required to exercise reasonable diligence in preserving the property, and he will be responsible for gross negligence. On the other hand, the finder of an article is entitled to recover all expenses which have necessarily occurred in preserving the thing found; as, if a man were to find an animal, he would be entitled to be reimbursed for its keeping, for advertising in a reasonable manner that he had found it, and to any reward which may have been offered by the owner for the recovery of such lost thing.[b] And when the owner does not reclaim the goods lost, they belong to the finder.[c]

CRIMINAL RESPONSIBILITY OF A FINDER. As to the criminal responsibility of a finder, the result of the authorities is that if a man finds goods that have been actually lost, or are reasonably supposed by him to have been lost, and appropriates them, with intent to take entire dominion over them, really believing when he takes them that the owner cannot be found, it is not larceny; but if he takes them with the like intent, though lost, or reasonably supposed to be lost, but reasonably believing that the owner can be found, it is larceny.[d]

MARRIAGE AND DIVORCE. See CONTRACTS.

MARRIAGE is a contract, made in due form of law, by which a man and woman reciprocally engage to live with each other during their joint lives, and to discharge towards each other the duties imposed by law on the relation of husband and wife.

CONTRACT OF MARRIAGE.

The marriage contract is in law a civil contract, to which the consent of the parties is essential. The marriage relation can only be entered into, maintained, and abrogated as provided by law. It is dissolved by death or divorce. A marriage which is valid by the laws of the country in which it is contracted is valid in this State. To make a valid marriage the parties must be willing to contract, able to contract, and have actually contracted.

All persons are able to contract marriage nnless they are under the legal age, or unless there be other disability; the age of consent at common law is fourteen in males and twelve in females.[a] When a person under this age marries, such person can, when he or she arrives at the age above specified, avoid the marriage, or such person or both may, if the other is of legal age, confirm it; if either of the parties is under seven, the marriage is void.[b]

If either party is non compos mentis or insane,[c] or has a husband or wife living,[d] the marriage is void. Consanguinity and affinity within the rules prescribed by law render the marriage void.

The parties must each be willing to marry the other. If either party acts under compulsion, or is under duress, the marriage is voidable.[e] Where one of the parties is mistaken in the person of the other, this requisite is wanting; but a mistake as to the qualities or character of the other party will not avoid the marriage.[f] If the apparent willingness is produced by fraud, the marriage will be valid until set aside by a court of competent jurisdiction, or by a decree of divorce.[g] Fraud is sometimes said to render a marriage void, but this is incorrect, as it is competent for the party injured to waive the tort, and affirm the marriage. Impotency in one of the parties is sometimes laid down as rendering the marriage void, as being a species of fraud on the other party; but it is only a ground for annulling the contract by a court or for a divorce.

The parties must actually make a contract of marriage; the form and requisites are hereinafter stated.

At common law no particular form of words or ceremony is necessary; mutual assent to the relation of husband and wife is sufficient. Any words importing a previous assent to being married to each other are sufficient evidence of the contract, if legally consummated.

Marriage is proved, in the absence of a license and certificate of the person authorized to perform the ceremony or proved copies thereof, from the subsequent acknowledgment of the parties, or from proof of cohabitation, or of general reputation resulting from the conduct of the parties.[h] In civil cases a marriage can generally be proved by showing that the parties have held themselves out as husband and wife, and by general reputation founded on their conduct. There is an exception, however, in the case of such civil suits as are founded on the marriage relation, such as actions for the seduction of the wife, where general reputation and cohabitation will not be sufficient.[i]

The civil effects of marriage are the following:

1. It confirms all matrimonial agreements between the parties;

2. It creates the civil affinity which each contracts towards the relations of the other;

Incestuous marriages are those prohibited by the law of nature. They are generally prohibited by statute.

The marriage ceremony may be regarded either as a civil ceremony or a religious sacrament.

HUSBAND'S OBLIGATIONS. He is bound to receive his wife at home, and should furnish her with all necessaries and conveniences which his fortune enables him to do, and which her situation requires; but this does not include such luxuries as, according to her fancy, she deems necessaries. He is bound to love his wife and to bear with her faults, and, if possible, by mild means, to correct them; and he is required to fulfil towards her his marital promise of fidelity, and can, therefore, have no carnal connection with any other woman, without a violation of his obligations. As he is bound to govern his house properly, he is liable for its misgovernment, and he may be punished for keeping a disorderly house, even where his wife had the principal agency, and he is liable for her torts, unless otherwise provided by statute.

——RIGHTS. Being the head of the family, the husband has a right to establish himself wherever he may please, and in this he cannot be controlled by his wife; he may manage his affairs in his own way, buy and sell all kinds of personal property, without her control, and he may buy any real estate he may deem proper; but as the wife acquires a right in the latter, he cannot sell it discharged of her interest, except by her consent, expressed in the manner prescribed by the laws of the State where such lands lie.

WIFE'S OBLIGATIONS. A wife is under obligation to love, honor, and obey her husband, and is bound to follow him wherever in the country he may choose to go and establish himself, provided it is not, for other causes, unreasonable. She is under obligation to be faithful in chastity to her marriage vow.[j]

——RIGHTS. A wife has a right to the love and protecting care of her husband; she has a right to share his bed and board; she can call upon her husband to provide her with necessary food and clothing according to her position in life, and if he neglects or refuses to do so, she can procure them on his account. As to her rights, on decease of her husband, in real estate, etc., see GENERAL STATUTES.

Any woman who shall have been married out of this Commonwealth, if her husband afterward become a resident thereof, enjoys all the rights as to property, which she may have acquired by the laws of any other State, Territory, or country, or which she may have acquired by virtue of any marriage contract or settlement made out of this State.

DIVORCE is the dissolution or partial suspension by law of the marriage relation. It is regulated by the statutes of the different States, and the various statutes are by no means uniform. Divorces are allowed for adultery, cruelty, desertion for a specified period, drunkenness if habitual, and other causes. In some States divorces are not allowed, are allowed for adultery only, and in others for any of the above or other causes. For specific information recourse must be had to the general statutes of the particular State.

ALIMONY. Of those consequences which result from the direction or order of the court, the most important are—Alimony, or the allowance which a husband, by order of court, pays to his wife, living separate from him, for her maintenance. The allowance may be for her use either during the pendency of a suit,—in which case it is called alimony pendente lite,—or after its termination, called permanent alimony.[k] Alimony is an allowance, not a sum of money nor a specific proportion of the husband's estate, given absolutely to the wife; it is a continuous allotment of sums payable at regular intervals for her support from year to year.[l] Alimony pendente lite is granted very much as a matter of course, unless the wife has sufficient separate property, upon the institution of a suit,[m] either for the purpose of obtaining a divorce from the bonds of matrimony,[n] a sentence of nullity, or a separation from bed and board,[o] and whether the wife be plaintiff or defendant; for it is improper for the parties to live in matrimonial cohabitation during the pendency of such a suit, whatever may be its result,[p] and therefore, the husband who has all the money, and the wife none, is bound to furnish her, whether plaintiff or defendant, with means to defray her expenses in the suit; otherwise she might be denied justice.[q] Alimony, especially permanent alimony, pertains rather to a separation from bed and board than to a divorce from the bond of matrimony. Indeed, it is generally allowed in the latter case only in pursuance of statutory provisions.[r] It is provided by statute in several States that, in case of divorce, the court may order the husband to restore to the wife, when she is the innocent party, and sometimes even when she is not, a part or the whole of the property which he received by the marriage.

In some cases, also, the court is authorized to divide the property between the parties, this being a substitute for the allowance of alimony. For further particulars, recourse must be had to the statutes in question.[r]

To entitle a wife to permanent alimony, the following conditions are requisite: 1. Proof of a legal and valid marriage.[s] 2. A subsistence of the relation of husband and wife;[t] but this requisite is not generally indispensable.[u] 3. The wife must be separated from the bed and board of her husband by judicial decree, as voluntary separation, for whatever cause, is insufficient. Permanent alimony must, as a general rule, be awarded by the same decree that grants the separation, or at least in the same suit, for it is not, in general, competent to maintain an independent or subsequent suit for that purpose.[v] 4. The wife must not be the guilty party.[w]

The amount to be awarded for alimony depends upon a great variety of considerations, and is governed by no fixed rules.[x] The ability of the husband is a circumstance of more importance than the necessity of the wife, especially in respect to permanent alimony; and in estimating his ability, his entire income, whether derived from his property or personal exertions, will be taken into consideration.[y] If the wife has separate property,[z] or derives income from her personal exertions, this will also be considered. The method of computation is to add the wife's annual income to her husband's; consider what, under the circumstances, should be allowed her out of the aggregate, then, from the sum so determined, deduct her separate income, and the remainder will be the annual allowance to be made her. There are various other circumstances besides the ability of the husband; as, whether the bulk of the property came from the wife, or belonged originally to the husband,[a] or was accumulated by the joint exertions of both subsequent to the marriage.[b] Whether there are children to be educated and supported, and upon whom their support and education devolves.[c] The condition in life, employment, health, and place of residence of the husband, as demanding a larger or smaller sum for his own support;[d] the circumstance, condition in life, health, necessary expenditures, and place of residence of the wife;[e] the conduct and demeanor of the wife towards the husband who desires cohabitation,[f] and his as well; the extent and nature of the husband's[g] or wife's offence; the aggravation or encouragement of the cause of separation by either, and whatever other circumstances or considerations address themselves to the discretion of the court.

The proportion of the joint income to be awarded for permanent alimony ranges from one-third to one-half. In alimony pendente lite, it is not usual to allow more than about one-fifth.[h] Generally, a less proportion will be allowed out of a large estate than a small one where the question is on alimony during the suit, for then the wife should live in seclusion, and wants only a comfortable subsistence.[i] The amount of alimony is liable at any time to be diminished or increased at the discretion of the court.[j]

Alimony must secure to the wife as wife, a maintenance separate from her husband; an absolute title in specific property, or a sale of a part of the husband's estate for her use, cannot be decreed or confirmed to her as alimony.[k] Nor is alimony regarded, in a general sense, as the separate property of the wife; hence she can neither alienate nor charge it;[l] if she suffers it to remain in arrears for more than one year, she cannot generally recover such arrears;[m] if she saves up anything from her annual allowance, upon her death it will go to her husband;[n] if there are any arrears at the time of her death, they cannot be recovered by her executors.[o] Her right to alimony ceases upon the death of her husband,[p] he being bound to support her only during his life; it ceases also upon reconciliation and cohabitation.

The extent, incidents, and nature of alimony is largely regulated by statute, and all observations concerning them should be very carefully received in conjunction with the statutes of the particular State where the subject is to be considered.[q]

CHILDREN—CUSTODY OF. The tribunal hearing a divorce cause is generally authorized by statute to direct, during its pendency and afterwards, with which of the parties, or with what other person, the children shall remain, and to make provision out of the husband's estate for their maintenance. There are few positive rules upon the subject, the matter being left to the discretion of the court, to be exercised according to the circumstances of each case. The general principle is to consult the welfare of the child, rather than any supposed rights of the parents, and as between the parents to prefer the innocent to the guilty. In the absence of a controlling necessity or very strong propriety arising from the circumstances of the case, the father's claim is to be preferred.[r]

THE CONSEQUENCES of divorce are such as flow from the sentence by operation of law, or flow from either the sentence or the proceeding by reason of their being directly ordered by the court and set down of record.[s] In regard to the former, they are chiefly such as result immediately and necessarily from the definition and nature of a divorce. Being a dissolution of the marriage relation, the parties have no longer any of the rights, nor are subject to any of the duties, pertaining to that relation. They are henceforth single persons to all intents and purposes. It is true that the statutes of some of the States contain provisions disabling the guilty party from marrying again; but these are in the nature of penal regulations, collateral to the divorce, and which leave the latter in full force.[t]

DEFENCES. Some of the principal defences in suits for divorce are: Connivance, or the corrupt consent of a party to the conduct in the other party whereof he afterwards complains. This bars the right of divorce, because no injury was received; for what a man has consented to he cannot say was an injury.[u] Collusion. This is an agreement between husband and wife for one of them to commit, or appear to commit, a breach of matrimonial duty, for the purpose of enabling the other to obtain the legal remedy of divorce, as for a real injury. Where the act has not been done, collusion is a real or attempted fraud upon the court; where it has, it is also a species of connivance; in either case it is a bar to any claim for divorce.[v] Condonation applies chiefly, though not exclusively, to the offence of adultery; it is the conditional forgiveness or remission by the husband or wife of a matrimonial offence which the other has committed. While the condition remains unbroken, condonation, on whatever motive it proceeded, is an absolute bar to the remedy for the particular injury condoned.[w] Recrimination. This is a defence arising from the complainant's being in like guilt with the one of whom he complains. It is incompetent for one of the parties to a marriage to come into court and complain of the other's violation of matrimonial duties, if the party complaining is guilty likewise. When the defendant sets up such violation in answer to the plaintiff's suit, this is called, in the matrimonial law, recrimination.[x]

The foregoing defences, though available in all divorce causes, are more frequently applicable where a divorce is sought on the ground of adultery.

PROPERTY: In regard to rights of property as between husband and wife, a sentence of divorce leaves them as it finds them. Consequently, all transfers of property which were actually executed, either in law or fact, continue undisturbed; for example, the personal estate of the wife, reduced to possession by the husband, remains his after the divorce the same as before. But it puts an end to all rights depending upon the marriage and not actually vested: as, dower in the wife, all rights of the husband in the real estate of the wife, and his right to reduce to possession her choses in action.[y] In respect to dower, however, it should be observed that a contrary doctrine has been settled in New York, it being there held that immediately upon the marriage being solemnized the wife's right to dower becomes perfect, provided only she survives her husband.[z]

VALIDITY OF DIVORCE. Numerous and difficult questions are constantly arising in regard to the validity in one State of divorces granted by the courts or legislature of another State. The following propositions require the highest consideration:[a] 1. The tribunals of a country have no jurisdiction over a cause of divorce, wherever the offence may have occurred, if neither of the parties has an actual bona fide domicil within its territory. 2. To entitle the court to take jurisdiction, it is sufficient for one of the parties to be domiciled in the country; both need not be, neither need the citation, when the domiciled party is plaintiff, be served personally on the defendant, if such personal service cannot be made. 3. The place where the offence was committed, whether in the country in which the suit is brought or a foreign country, is immaterial. 4. The domicil of the parties at the time of the offence committed is of no consequence, the jurisdiction depending on their domicil when the proceeding is instituted and the judgment is rendered. 5. It is immaterial to this question of jurisdiction in what country or under what system of divorce laws the marriage was celebrated. It should be observed, however, that the last proposition but one is not sustained by authority in Pennsylvania and New Hampshire, it being held in those States that the tribunals of the country alone where the parties were domiciled when the delictum (fault or offence) occurred have jurisdiction to grant a divorce.[b] And in regard to the second proposition, it is to be observed that, without personal citation within the State, the divorce is not of binding effect in any other State.

NECESSARIES. See APPRENTICESHIP; CONTRACTS; ETC.

NECESSARIES. The term "necessaries" is not confined merely to what is requisite barely to support life, but includes many of the conveniences of refined society. It is a relative term, which must be applied to the circumstances and conditions of the parties.[a] Ornaments and superfluities of dress, such as are usually worn by the party's rank and situation in life,[b] some degree of education,[c] lodging and house-rent,[d] horses, saddles, bridles, liquors, pistols, powder, whips, and fiddles have been held not to be necessaries.[e]

The rule for determining what are necessaries is that whether articles of a certain kind or certain subjects of expenditure are, or are not such necessaries as an infant may contract for, is a matter of law, and for instruction by the court; but the question whether any particular things come under these classes, and the question also as to the quantity, are generally matters for the jury to determine.[f]

Infants may contract for necessaries,[g] but are not liable for borrowed money, though expended for necessaries.[h] Necessaries for the infant's wife and children are necessaries for himself.[i] A wife is allowed to make contracts for necessaries, and her husband is generally responsible upon them, because his assent is presumed; and even if notice be given not to trust her, still he would be liable for all such necessaries as she stood in need of, but in this case the creditor would be required to show she did stand in need of the articles furnished.[j] But if the wife elopes, though it be not with an adulterer, he is not chargeable even for necessaries; the very fact of the elopement and separation is sufficient to put persons on inquiry, and whoever gives credit to the wife afterwards gives it at his peril.[k]

NOVATION. See CONTRACTS, ETC.

NOVATION is the substitution of a new obligation for an old one, which is thereby extinguished. A transaction, whereby a debtor is discharged from his liability to his original creditor, by contracting a new obligation in favor of a new creditor, by the order of his original creditor. The term novation is rarely employed. The usual common law equivalent is assignment and sometimes merger. Still, this form of contract found its way into common law treatises as early as Fleta's day, by whom it was called innovatio.[a]

If A. owes B. fifty dollars; B. owes C. the same sum, and, at the request of C., orders A. to pay that sum, when it shall fall due, to C.; to this A. consents, and B. discharges A. from all obligation to him.[b] And if A. owes B., and B. owes C., and it is agreed by these three parties that A. shall pay this debt to C., and A. is by this agreement discharged from his debt to B., and B. is also discharged from his debt to C., then there is an obligation created from A. to C., and C. may bring an action in his own name.[c] The mutual assent of all three parties is necessary to make an effectual novation, or substitution.[d] This new promise

NUISANCE. See DAMAGES; CRIMINAL LAW.

A NUISANCE is that which incommodes or annoys; something that produces inconvenience or damage. Nuisances are either private or public. Private when it affects individuals, as when one man erects a house so near his neighbor as to throw the water off the roof upon his neighbor's land or house, or to intercept the light that his neighbor before enjoyed. Public, when it annoys citizens in general, as obstructions of the highway.[a]

It is difficult to say what degree of annoyance constitutes a nuisance. If a thing is calculated to interfere with the comfortable enjoyment of a man's house, it is a nuisance.[b] In relation to offensive trades, it seems that when such a trade renders the enjoyment of life and property uncomfortable it is a nuisance,[c] for the neighborhood have a right to pure and fresh air.[d]

A thing may be a nuisance in one place which is not so in another; therefore the situation or locality of the nuisance must be considered. A tallow-chandler setting up his business among other tallow-chandlers, and increasing the noxious smells of the neighborhood, is not guilty of setting up a nuisance unless the annoyance is much increased by the new manufactory.[e] Such an establishment might be a nuisance in a thickly-populated town of merchants and mechanics where no such business was carried on. Carrying on an offensive trade for twenty years in a place remote from buildings and public roads does not entitle the owner to continue it in the same place after houses have been built and roads laid out in the neighborhood, to the occupants of and travellers upon which it is a nuisance.[f] The trade may be offensive for noise,[g] or smell,[h] or for other reasons.[i]

Private nuisances may be to corporeal inheritances; as, for example, if a man should build his house so as to throw the rain-water which fell on it on my land;[j] or erect his building, without right, so as to obstruct my ancient lights;[k] keep hogs or other animals so as to incommode his neighbor and render the air unwholesome;[l] or to incorporeal hereditaments: as, for example, obstructing a right of way by ploughing it up, or laying logs across it, and the like;[m] or obstructing a spring;[x] interfering with a franchise, as a ferry or railroad, by a similar erection unlawfully made.[n]

To constitute a public nuisance, there must be such a number of persons annoyed that the offence can no longer be considered a private nuisance; this is a fact, generally, to be judged of by the jury.[o] Public nuisances arise in consequence of following particular trades, by which the air is rendered offensive and noxious:[p] from acts of public indecency, as bathing in a public river in sight of the neighboring houses;[q] or for acts tending to a breach of the public peace, as for drawing a number of persons into a field for the purpose of pigeon-shooting, to the disturbance of the neighborhood;[r] or keeping a disorderly house;[s] or a gaming house;[t] or a bawdy house;[u] or a dangerous animal, known to be such, and suffering him to go at large, as a large bulldog accustomed to bite people;[v] or exposing a person having a contagious disease, as the small-pox, in public;[w] and the like. The bringing a horse infected with the glanders into a public place, to the danger of infecting the citizens, is a misdemeanor at common law.[x] The leaving unburied the corpse of a person for whom the defendant was bound to provide Christian burial, as a wife or child, is an indictable nuisance, if he is shown to have been of ability to provide such burial.[y]

The remedies are by an action for the damage done, by the owner, in the case of a private nuisance;[z] or by any party suffering special damage, in the case of a public nuisance;[a] by abatement by the owner, when the nuisance is private;[b] and in some cases when it is public, if no riot is committed;[c] by injunction or by indictment for a public nuisance.[d]

OWNER. See ASSIGNMENT; BAILMENTS; SALES; ETC., ETC.

AN OWNER is he who has dominion of a thing, real or personal, corporeal or incorporeal, which he has a right to enjoy and do with as he pleases—even to spoil or destroy it, as far as the law permits, unless he be prevented by some agreement or covenant, which restrains his right. Although there can be but one absolute owner of a thing, there may be a qualified ownership of the same thing by many. Thus, a bailor has the general ownership in the thing bailed, the bailee the special ownership. The right of the absolute owner is more extended than that of him who has only a qualified ownership; as, for example, the use of the thing. Thus, the absolute owner of the estate, that is, an owner in fee, may cut the wood, demolish the buildings, build new ones, and dig wherever he may deem proper for minerals, stone, plaster, and similar things, which would be considered actionable and would not be allowed in a qualified owner of the estate, as a lessee or a tenant for life. The word owner, when used alone, imports an absolute owner.[e]

When there are several joint owners of a thing—as, for example, of a ship—the majority of them have a right to make contracts in respect to such thing in the usual course of business or repair, and the like, and the minority will be bound by such contracts.[f]

GENERAL PARTNERSHIP.

PARTNERSHIP is a voluntary contract between two or more persons for joining together their money, goods, labor, and skill, or any or all of them, in some lawful commerce or business, under an understanding, express, or implied from the nature of the enterprise, that there shall be a communion of profit and loss between them.[a] The law of partnership, as administered in England and the United States, rests on a foundation composed of three materials—the common law, the law of merchants, and the Roman law.[b]

A partnership exists when two or more persons combine their property, skill, and labor, or one or more of them, in the transaction of business, for their common profit.[c] When a partnership is formed by written articles, it is considered as beginning at the date of the articles, unless they contain a stipulation to the contrary.[d]

As a general rule, a partnership may exist in any business or transaction which is not a mere personal office, and for the performance of which payment may be enforced.[e] It may be created for a special purpose, or confined by the parties to a particular line of business, or even a single transaction.[f] One partner may contribute all the money or all the stock, or all the labor or skill necessary for the purposes of the firm; but in order to make people liable as partners to each other, it is necessary that there should be a community of profits,[g] although one of them may stipulate to be indemnified against loss.[h] This, however, respects their mutual claims, for however they may stipulate with each other, all who take a share in the profits,[i] and all who allow themselves to be described and held out as partners, are liable as such to those to whom they have so held themselves out.[j] Supposing the parties to have become partners, the result is that each individual partner constitutes the others his agents for the purpose of entering into all contracts for him in the scope of the partnership concern, and consequently, that he is liable to the performance of all such contracts in the same manner as if entered into personally by himself.[k] It is not essential to the existence of a partnership that there should be any joint capital or stock.[l] Sometimes a partnership exists between parties merely as the managers and disposers of the goods of others.[m] A partnership is presumed to be general when there is no stipulations, or no evidence, from the course of business, to the contrary.[n] There may be a partnership to trade in land.[o] A ship as well as any other chattel, may be held in strict partnership.[p] But ships are generally owned by parties as tenants in common; and they are not, in consequence of such ownership, to be considered as partners.[q] The same is true of any other species of property in which the parties have only a community of interest.[r]

CONTRACT. The formation of a contract of partnership does not require any particular formality. It is, in general, sufficient that it is formed by the voluntary consent of the parties, whether that be express or implied; whether it be by written articles, tacit approbation, or by parol contract, or even by mere acts.[s] Although ordinary partnerships may be formed without any written contract, and the acts and words of the parties are ordinarily sufficient for that purpose, yet, if the object of the company be to speculate in the purchase and sale of land, the positive rules of law and the statute of frauds require the partnership agreement to be in writing.[t] But this applies only to the contract between the parties, for as to third persons the partnership may be proved like any other.[u] A partnership, in general, is constituted between individuals, by an agreement to enter together, into a general or a particular business, and share the profits and losses thereof.[v] The criterion of a partnership is, whether the parties are to participate in profit. If the actual contract give a claim upon the profits, or the application of them, that is a partnership.[w] A participation in the uncertain profits of trade renders one a copartner in respect to the liabilities of the concern to third persons.[x] But the mere sharing of profits, without any connection whatever in the business, is not enough to constitute a partnership.[y] Thus, if one firm agrees with another, that each shall continue and carry on its business independently, but that the profits and losses of each firm shall be divided between the two, the two firms do not enter into partnership, nor do the members of one firm become partners with the members of the other.[z] There need not, however, be a community of interests in the property, if there be in the profits and some connection in the business.[a] But a setting apart a portion of the profits to pay the debt of a third person, does not make him a partner.[b] So, too, a joint purchase, but for the purpose of distinct and separate sales by each party on his own account, does not constitute the purchasers partners.[c] There are but few cases where a writing is necessary. Under the statute of frauds, where there is an agreement that a partnership shall commence at some time more than a year from the making of the agreement, a writing is necessary.[d] With respect to that part of the statute of frauds relating to lands, it has been held that a partnership may be constituted without writing,[e] and that if a partnership is proved to exist it may be shown that its property consists of land, although there is no signed agreement between the parties.[f] So it has been held, that an agreement to form a partnership for the purpose of buying and selling land may be proved by parol.[g] But this latter proposition is not generally conceded. The contrary doctrine has the weight of learned opinion.[h]

Persons may be copartners as to third parties and brought within all the liabilities of partnership as to them, who are not partners between themselves.[i] For whether they are partners is determined chiefly by their own intention; but whether they are partners in respect to third parties, is determined by a consideration of this intention, and also of that actual participation of profits which is held to require them to participate in the losses, because it diminishes the fund from which the losses are to be paid; and also of the way and degree in which the person sought to be charged as partner has been held out to the world as such, so that the person seeking to charge him had good reason to believe the debt of the partnership carried with it his responsibility.[j] Though a man really have no interest in the firm, yet if he suffer himself to be held out to the world as a member of it, he thereby authorizes those to whom he has been held out to treat him as a contracting party.[k] To make a man liable as nominal partner, he must have been held out as such to the plaintiff.[l] A contract to pay one employed in certain business a salary equal in amount to a certain proportion of the profits, will not make such a person a partner. The question of profits is of importance only in determining the amount of the salary. Neither will a certain salary, together with a certain per cent. upon the profits, make the receiver a partner.[m] An agreement by which a person is to receive a certain portion of the profits for his salary, does not constitute a partnership, such person having no special interest in the profits themselves, as profits.[n] Nor do factors and brokers for a commission on the profits, nor a master of vessel engaging for the share of the profits,[o] become partners, and are not, therefore, liable for the debts, as a partner is. It is sometimes difficult to distinguish between partnership and tenancy in common. In general, if the property owned jointly is so owned for the purpose of a joint business, and is so used, and the profits resulting from a common fund, it is partnership property; otherwise not.[p]

Though partnerships are usually formed by participation in profits and losses, partners may agree as to any way of dividing the losses; that a partner shall have his share of the profits and not be liable for losses. And this agreement is valid as between themselves. And this agreement will be equally efficacious, whether stated in articles, or proved by circumstances, or otherwise. For partners among themselves may make whatever bargain they choose. But no such agreement will prevent such partner from being liable for the debts of the partnership, unless the creditor knew of this bargain between the partners, and with this knowledge gave the credit to the other partners only.[p]

The liability of a partner springs either from his holding himself out to the world as a partner, or from his participation in the business and its profit or loss. If these two cases meet, as is usually the case, they strengthen each other; but either of them alone is, in general, sufficient to create this liability.[q] There is no liability as a partner, where there is neither a participation in the profits, nor any such use of the defendant's name permitted by him as justifies the plaintiff in selling to others on his credit, although there may be in some way or measure a community of interest.[r]

Proof of existence. Whether a partnership exists or not in a particular case is not a mere question of fact, but one of mixed law and fact. It is, nevertheless, generally to be decided by a jury.[s] The existence of a partnership may be proved by showing—1. A distinct agreement for a partnership: or, 2. An agreement to share profit and loss; either of these will be conclusive: or, 3. An agreement to share profits—which will be strong evidence of a partnership: or, 4. Circumstances sufficient to establish a quasi-partnership which, being proved, is held to be prima facie evidence of a real partnership.

Where there is no written agreement, the evidence generally relied upon to prove a partnership is the conduct of the parties, the mode in which they have dealt with each other, and the mode in which each has, with the knowledge of the others, dealt with other persons. This can be shown by the books of account, by the testimony of clerks, agents, and other persons, by letters and admissions, and, in short, by any of the modes in which facts can be established.[t]

DISSOLUTION. A partnership may be dissolved in either of the following modes:

By the act of the parties, as by their mutual consent.[u] And where no specified period is limited for the continuance of the partnership, either party may dissolve it at his pleasure.[v] If the partnership be for a time certain, one partner may maintain an action against the other for a breach of the articles in dissolving before the period therein limited. And the action may be brought before the expiration of the time for which the partnership was limited. The damages would be the profits which would have accrued to the plaintiff from the continuation of the business.[w] When a partnership is not to endure for a time certain by the articles of copartnership, or where that time has expired, it may undoubtedly be dissolved at the pleasure of either partner.[x] But notice should be given to the other partner.[y] This should be a reasonable notice where the articles are totally silent upon the subject, and where, without such notice, injury would be inflicted, or fraud indicated.[z] The duration may be gathered from the terms of the articles, although not expressly provided for.[a] As against third persons a partner may withdraw from the partnership at will.[b]

By the act of God, as by the death of one of the partners; and this operates from the time of the death.[c] In such case the dissolution takes place from the time of the death, however numerous the association, and this not only to the deceased partner, but also as to all the survivors.[d] And the same rule applies to a silent partner,[e] unless there be an express stipulation to the contrary.[f] Although death of a partner operates a dissolution of the partnership, the articles of copartnership may provide for its continuance, by an agreement that the executors, administrators, heirs, or other designated persons, shall take the place of the deceased partner.[g] And such express agreement for the continuance of the partnership after the death of one partner is necessary, although the partnership is for a term of years.[h] Absolute insanity, or any equivalent disability, operates at once, and ipso facto, a dissolution.[i]

By the act of the law, as by the bankruptcy of one of the partners.[j] Bankruptcy of the firm, or of one partner, operates an immediate dissolution.[k] An act of bankruptcy does not dissolve the partnership instanter. The adjudication that he is a bankrupt is what severs the partnership.[l] Insolvency under the statute would have the same effect.[m] And bankruptcy destroys the right of a partner to bind the firm by an acknowledgment of debt.[n] But either of the solvent and competent partners may collect, adjust, and receipt for partnership accounts.[o]

By a valid assignment of all the partnership effects for the benefit of creditors, either under insolvent acts[p] or otherwise,[q] and by a sale of partnership effects under a separate execution against one partner.[r] But the mere insolvency of one or all the members of a partnership does not itself operate a dissolution.[s]

By the assignment of the whole of one partner's interest either to his copartner or to a stranger.[t] Where it does not appear that the assignee acts in the concern after the assignment.[u] Where it was held that this would not ipso facto work a dissolution. Any assignment of a copartner's interest in the partnership's funds operates, ipso facto, a dissolution. So, the assignment of the whole of a copartner's interest.[v] And an assignment by one partner of his share of the future profits to another partner is a dissolution of the partnership, because the essence of that is a participation of the profits.[w]

By the award of arbitrators appointed under a clause in the partnership articles to that effect.[x]

By the civil death of one of the partners;[y] but the absconding of a party from the State does not of itself operate a dissolution.[z]

By the extinction of the subject-matter of the joint business or undertaking,[a] and by the completion of the business or adventure for which the partnership was formed.[b]

By the termination of the period for which a partnership for a certain time was formed.[c] If the partnership be continued, by express or tacit consent after that period, it will be presumed to continue on the old terms,[d] but as a partnership at will.

By the breaking out of a war two States in which the partners are domiciled and carrying on trade.[e]

A partnership for a term may be dissolved before the expiration of the term, by the decree of a court of equity founded on the wilful fraud or other gross misconduct of one of the partners;[f] so on his gross carelessness and waste in the administration of the partnership, and his exclusion of the other partners from their just share of the management;[g] so on the existence of a violent and lasting dissension between the partners,[h] where these are of such a character as to prevent the business from being conducted upon the stipulated terms,[i] and to destroy the mutual confidence of the partners in each other.[j] But a partner cannot, by misconducting himself and rendering it impossible for his copartners to act in harmony with him, obtain a dissolution on the ground of impossibility so created by himself.[k] A partnership may be dissolved by decree when its business is in a hopeless state, its continuance impracticable, and its property liable to be wasted and lost.[l]

The confirmed lunacy of an active partner is sufficient to induce a court of equity to decree a dissolution, not only for the purpose of protecting the lunatic, but also to relieve his copartners from the difficult position in which the lunacy places them.[m] The same may be said of every other inveterate infirmity, such as palsy, or the like, which has seized upon one of the partners, and rendered him incompetent to act where his personal labor and skill were contracted for.[n]

But lunacy does not itself dissolve the firm, nor do other infirmities.[o] The court does not decree a dissolution on the ground of lunacy, except upon clear evidence that the malady exists, and is incurable.[p] A temporary illness is not sufficient.[q] A dissolution by the court, on the ground of insanity, dates from the decree, and not from a prior day.[r]

Dissolution with respect to Third Persons. The partnership as to third persons, that is, the liability of partners with respect to third persons, cannot be dissolved without notice to them that the partnership no longer exists. Actual notice must be brought home to persons who have been in the habit of dealing with the firm; but as to all persons who have had no previous dealings with the firm, notice fairly given in the public newspapers is deemed sufficient.[s] This notice is necessary to terminate the agency of each partner, and, consequently, his power to bind the firm.[t]

It is not necessary to give notice of the retirement of a dormant partner from the firm, if the fact of his being a partner be unknown to all the creditors of the firm; if it be known to some, notice to those must be given, but that will be sufficient.[u]

Notice of the dissolution is not necessary in case of the death of one of the partners, to free the estate of the deceased partner from further liability;[v] nor is notice, in fact, necessary in any case where the dissolution takes place by operation of law.[w]

EFFECT OF DISSOLUTION. The effect of dissolution as between partners is to terminate all transactions between them as partners, except for the purpose of taking a general account, and winding up the concern.[x] As to third persons, the effect of a dissolution is to absolve the partners from all liability for future transactions, but not for past transactions of the firm.[y] Dissolution, however it takes place, terminates altogether the power of a partner to carry on the business concerns of the partnership, in a way to bind former partners by any contract whatever. The former partners are partners no longer, but tenants in common; and where there is no agreement to the contrary, each partner, after dissolution, possesses the same authority to adjust the affairs of the firm, by collecting its debts, and disposing of its property, as before dissolution; but they can no longer bind each other, even by varying the form of existing obligations.[z] No partner can indorse a note of the firm, even to pay a prior debt of the firm.[a] When a partner dies, the partnership property goes to the survivors for the purpose of settlement, and they all have the power necessary for that purpose, and no more.[b] And the survivors can charge nothing for their trouble or labor in settling the concern.[c] Nor is a partner entitled to compensation for extra services in the absence of an express contract, and there is no principle of the law which authorizes an inquiry into the inequality of the services of partners, unless there be an express stipulation to that effect.[d] They are tenants in common with the representatives of the deceased, as to the choses in possession; and they have a lien on them to settle the affairs of the concern, and pay its debts.[e] Proper notice should be given of a dissolution, for a firm may be bound by a contract made after the dissolution, or retirement of one or more, by a former partner, in the usual course of business, with a person who had no notice or knowledge of the dissolution.[f]

The power of the partners subsists for many purposes after dissolution; among these are:[g]

1. The completion of all the unfinished engagements of the partnership.

2. The conversion of all the property, means, and assets of the partnership existing at the time of the dissolution, for the benefit of those who were partners, according to their respective shares.

3. The application of partnership funds to the payment of the partnership debts.

But although, for the purposes of winding up the concern, and fulfilling engagements that could not be fulfilled during its existence, the power of partners subsists even after dissolution, yet, legally, and strictly speaking, it subsists for those purposes only.[h]

RIGHTS OF CREDITORS CONCERNING PARTNERSHIP FUNDS. The property of a partnership is bound to the payment of the partnership debts, and the right of a private creditor of one copartner to that partner's interest in the property of the firm, is postponed to the right of the partnership creditor.[i] Where an attachment by mesne process exists, such attachment is allowed; but it is generally made subject to the paramount rights of the partnership creditors.[j] It is well settled that if partnership effects can be taken by attachment or on execution to secure or satisfy the debts of one of the partners, this can be done only to the extent of that partner's interest, and subject to the settlement of all partnership accounts.[k] The general rule of law is, that in levying an execution against one partner for his separate debt, the officer may take possession of all the joint property of the firm, in order to inventory and appraise it. He has no authority to divide it; he can only sell the joint interest of the debtor, whatever it may be, and the purchaser will stand in the place of the debtor, and hold the same interest in the joint concern which he held. The levy of execution does not give the creditor a separate possession of the goods. The indebted partner had no such possession himself; and the levy gives to his creditor only that which the debtor had; and that is a right to call for an account, and then a right to the balance which may be found to belong to him upon a settlement.

In the absence of statutory provisions, an officer cannot take or give, by sale, specific possession of the partnership property; he takes, and can sell only the right and interest of the indebted partner to, and in the whole fund. After sale on execution, the officer should convey to the purchaser all the right and interest of the indebted partner in the stock and property of the partnership.

Private creditors of one of the partners cannot reach the partnership funds until the claims of the partnership creditors are satisfied.[l] The assets of a deceased, and of insolvent partners, if there be a partnership and separate property, will be distributed by paying the firm debts out of the joint estate, and the individual debts out of the separate estate; the joint and individual debts should be kept separate, and the assets of the two estates marshalled accordingly; joint creditors must first resort to the joint fund, and the creditors of the individual partners to their separate property; upon the inadequacy of either of these, then the joint or separate estate may be applied, according to the exigency of the case; if there is no joint fund, nor any solvent partner, joint creditors may participate equally with a private creditor in the estate of a deceased partner, and if there should be a surplus of the joint fund, the creditor of an individual partner may resort to that.[m]

MEMBERS.

Partners are members of partnership. Dormant partners are those whose names and transactions as partners are professedly concealed from the world. Nominal partners are ostensible partners who have no interest in the firm or business. Ostensible partners are those whose names appear to the world as partners, and who in reality are such.

Persons who have the legal capacity to make other contracts may enter into that of partnership.[a] A lunatic seems not to be absolutely incapable of being a partner.[b] A minor may contract the relation of partner, as he may make any other trading contract which may possibly turn out to be for his benefit.[c] This contract is subject to the right of avoidance by the minor; but, as in the case of continuing contracts, he is presumed to ratify it, and will be liable on subsequent contracts made on the credit of the partnership if he do not, within a reasonable time after he has attained his full age, give notice of his disaffirmance of or otherwise repudiate the partnership.[d] It has been held that if a party who was a member of a firm during his minority, does in any manner concur with in carrying on the partnership, or receive profits from it, after he comes of age, it amounts to a confirmation, and will render him liable on the contracts of the firm made during his minority.[e] The person with whom the minor contracts will be bound by all the consequences.[f]

Persons domiciled, and trading in different countries at war with each other, cannot be partners.[g]

Generally speaking, the common law imposes no restriction as to the number of persons who may carry on trade as partners.[h]

PARTNERS IN LAW. If persons suffer their names to be used in a business, or otherwise hold themselves out as partners, they are to be so considered, whatever may be the engagements between them and the other partners.[i] In such cases they will be equally responsible with the other partners, although they receive no profits; for the contract of one is the contract of all.[j] This rule of law arises not upon the ground of the real transaction between the partners, but upon principles of general policy, to prevent the frauds to which creditors would be liable if they were to suppose that they lent their money upon the apparent credit of three or four persons, when, in fact, they lent it only to two of them, to whom, without others, they would have lent nothing.[k] It has been held that it is not necessary for a person charging a nominal partner to have been aware of the partnership at the time of the contract,[l] and this doctrine has been vindicated on the ground that the object of the rule is to prevent the extension of unsound credit.[m] But the doctrine has been very much questioned.[n] The term "holding one's self out as partner," imports, at least, the voluntary act of the party holding himself out,[o] but no particular mode of holding himself out is requisite to charge a party. The usual evidence to charge a party in such cases is that he suffered the use of his name over the shop door, in printed notices, bills of parcels, and advertisements, or that he has done acts, or suffered his agents to do acts,[p] no matter of what kind, sufficient to induce others to believe him to be a partner.[q] If there be a stipulation that a person appearing to be a partner shall be liable to no loss, he, of course, will not be liable as a partner to those who have absolute knowledge of such stipulation.[r]

Dormant partners are, when discovered, equally liable with those who are held out to the world as partners, upon contracts made during the time they participate in the profits of the business.[s] The principle upon which dormant partners are liable is that, as they have the benefit of a share in the profits which are a part of the fund to which a creditor looks for payment, they shall be bound by the burdens.[t] Another reason given for holding them liable is that they might otherwise receive usurious interest without any risk.[u]

Sharing Profits. The general result of the authorities seems to be that persons who share in the profits of the concern are prima facie liable as partners to third persons; if they have not held themselves out, or allowed themselves to be held out, as partners, they may repel the presumption of partnership by showing that the legal relation of partnership inter se does not exist.[v] This presumption may be repelled by showing that the persons who receive a share of the profits are mere servants, agents, factors, brokers, or other persons receiving such share of the profits in lieu of wages, or commission for their labor, trouble, or services.[w] A distinction has been sometimes made between sharing the gross profits or earnings and the net profits; but it is far from being treated as decisive on the question of partnership.[x]

The contract must be voluntary among the members; therefore no stranger can be introduced into the firm without a concurrence of the whole firm.[y] The delectus personæ, as it is called, is so essentially necessary to the constitution of a partnership, that even the executors, or other representatives of partners themselves do not, in their capacity of executors, or representatives, succeed to the state and condition of partners.[z] But it may be stipulated that the heirs or executors of partners themselves shall be partners,[a] and such stipulation is binding.[b] Although the delectus personæ, which is inherent in the nature of partnership, precludes the introduction of a stranger into the concern against the will of any of the partners, yet no partner is precluded from entering into a sub partnership with a stranger.[c] In such case the stranger may share the profits of the particular partner with whom he contracts.

Powers. It may be stated, as a general principle which governs all partnerships in trade, that each individual partner constitutes the others his agents for the purpose of entering into all contracts for him within the scope of the partnership concern, and, consequently, that he is liable to the performance of all such contracts in the same manner as if entered into personally by himself.[d] In truth, the law of partnership is a branch of the law of principal and agent. If two agree that they should carry on a trade and share the profits of it, each is a principal and each is an agent for the other, and each is bound by the other's contracts in carrying on the trade as much as a single principal would be by the act of an agent who was to give the whole of the profits to his employer. Hence it becomes a test of liability of one for the contract of another, that he is to receive the whole or a part of the profits arising from that contract by virtue of the agreement made at the time of the employment.[e] If an act is done by one partner on behalf of the firm, and it can be said to have been necessary for the carrying on of the partnership business in the ordinary way, the firm will prima facie be liable, although in point of fact the act was not authorized by the other partners; but if the act cannot be said to have been necessary for the carrying on of the partnership business in the ordinary way, the firm will prima facie not be liable.[f]

Each partner has power to manage the ordinary business of the firm, whatever it may be, and, consequently, to bind his partners, whether they be ostensibly dormant, actual, or normal,[g] by whatever he may do in the course of such management, as entirely as himself. A partner may, for instance, borrow money,[h] purchase goods,[i] and sell[k] the whole of the partnership goods at a single sale.[l] So he may pledge the partnership goods[m] even in the case of a particular adventure.[n] This principle does not extend to the case of a joint-purchase or sub-purchase.[o] The right of a partner to dispose of the property of the firm extends to assignments of it as security for antecedent debts, as well as for debts thereafter to be contracted on account of the firm.[p] The assignment may be for the benefit of one creditor or of several, or of all the joint creditors where all are admitted to an equal participation.[q] It has been held that one partner may without the consent or knowledge of his copartners mortgage all the goods of the firm to secure a particular creditor of the firm.[r] The right of one partner to dispose of the partnership property is, however, confined strictly to personal effects, and does not extend to real estate held by the partnership.[s]

A partner may draw, accept, and indorse bills, notes, and checks in the name and for the use of the firm,[t] and a note or bill executed by one partner in the name of the firm is prima facie evidence that it was executed for partnership purposes.[u] But if a partnership be carried on under a single name, it has been held that the legal presumption in regard to a note signed by that name, is, that it was a personal and not a partnership note.[v] One partner may effect insurance,[w] and receive money for the firm,[x] may compromise with its debtors or creditors,[y] and release debts due to it,[z] and such acts and dealings, if they fall within the ordinary business of the firm,[a] will bind all the other partners. A warranty of a horse upon sale thereof by one of several horse-dealers' partners would bind the others.[b] Upon the principle that the act and assurance of one partner, made with reference to business transacted by the firm, will bind all the partners; the acknowledgment, promise, or undertaking of one partner with reference to the contracts of the partnership, is held to be the acknowledgment, promise, or undertaking of all.[c]

Power to Interfere with, or Dissent from Future Contracts, etc. One partner may interfere, and, by his dissent from future contracts by his copartner, or from closing of contracts with him which have not become binding upon the firm, he may, upon express notice thereof, avoid any liability subsequently arising upon such contracts if entered into, unless the dissenting partner afterwards assents to and ratifies the transaction.[d] But it seems that the dissenting partner would not be liable merely on the ground that the goods purchased, or the fruits of the contract, came to the use of the firm,[e] unless they were of some benefit to the firm.[f] It has, however, been questioned whether the dissent of one partner where the partnership consists of more than two, will affect the validity of partnership contracts made by the majority of the firm in the usual course of business, and within the scope of the concern.[g] In the absence of an express stipulation, a majority must decide as to the disposal of the partnership property,[h] but the power of the majority must be confined to the ordinary business of the partnership.[i] It does not extend to the right to change any of the articles thereof,[j] nor to engage the partnership in transactions for which it was never intended.[k] Where a majority is authorized to act, it must be fairly constituted, and must proceed with the most entire good faith.[l]

Power to Bind the Firm in Submission, Arbitration, Confession of Judgment, etc. One partner cannot bind the firm by submitting any of the affairs of the firm to arbitration, whether by deed or parol.[m] The principle is that there is no implied authority, excepting so far as it is necessary to carry on the business of the firm.[n] It might also affect the rights of the other partners to resort to the ordinary course of justice.[o] Still, in some States, one partner may submit partnership matters to arbitration.[p]

One partner cannot, by confessing a voluntary judgment, bind his copartners, unless actually brought into court by regular service of process against him and his partner; a judgment so confessed will bind the partners who did it only.[q] Nor can one partner, by entering an appearance for another, bind him personally and individually, where the latter is not within the jurisdiction, and has not been served with process.[r]

One partner will be bound by the fraud of his copartner in contracts relating to the affairs of the copartnership made with innocent third persons.[s] This doctrine proceeds upon the ground that, where one of two innocent persons must suffer by the act of a third person, he shall suffer who has been the cause or occasion of the confidence and credit reposed in such third person.[t] The liability, therefore, does not arise when there is collusion between the fraudulent partners and the party with whom he deals,[u] or the latter have reason to suppose that the partner is acting on his own account.[v] A partner may be made liable for other wrongs committed in reference to the partnership business by his copartners; as, where a partner injures a third person by negligence in driving a coach, the property of the firm and employed on their business.[w] A joint conversion may be raised in point of law, by the assent of the partner to the acts of his copartner.[x] Demand of, and refusal by one partner to deliver up property is evidence of a conversion by both.[y] But the wilful tort of one partner seems not in general to be imputable to the firm.[z]

Private Arrangements between Partners, etc. No arrangements between the partners themselves can limit or prevent their ordinary responsibilities to third persons, unless the latter assent to such arrangements.[a] But where the creditor has express notice of a private arrangement between the partners, by which either the power of one to bind the firm, or his liability on partnership contracts is qualified or defeated, such creditor will be bound by the arrangement.[b] The act or contract of one partner, even in a transaction purely of a partnership nature, does not bind the firm, if the creditor has express notice from the other partners that they will not consider themselves responsible,[c] for the authority of one partner to bind the firm is only implied; and no one can become the creditor of another against his express and declared will.[d]

The partnership property consists of the original stock and the additions made to it in the course of trade. All real estate purchased for the partnership, paid for out of the funds thereof, and devoted to partnership uses and trusts, whether the legal title is in one or all of the partners, is treated in equity in the same manner as other partnership property until the partnership account is settled, and the partnership debts are paid.[e] Leases of real estate taken by one partner for partnership purposes, mines, and trade-marks, are held to be partnership property.[f]

A peculiar species of interest, called good-will of the trade or business, is often treated as in some sort a part of the partnership property.[g] It is considered to enhance the value of the effects on it, is attendant, and will, therefore, be included in a decree for the sale of those effects.[h] The good-will of a professional partnership belongs, in the absence of express stipulation, exclusively to the survivors.[i]

Partners as Joint Tenants, and Differing from Tenants in Common, etc. Partners are said to be joint tenants of the partnership property, without benefit of survivorship inter se.[j] But in addition to the ordinary right of joint tenants, each partner has also a power, singly, to dispose of the entire right of all the partners in the partnership effects, for the purposes of partnership, and in the name of the firm.[k]

Partnership also differs from a tenancy in common in reference to the power of disposal, and because, inter se, each partner has a claim, not to any specific share or interest in the property in specie, as a tenant in common has, but to the proportion of the residue which shall be found to be due to him upon the final balance of their accounts, after the conversion of the assets, and the liquidation thereout of all the claims upon the partnership; and, therefore, each partner has a right to have the same applied to the discharge and payment of all such claims before any one of the partners, or his personal representatives, or his individual creditors, can claim any right or title thereto.[l]

If a Partner has taken the whole or any part of his share out of the partnership stock, the stock so taken, if identified, is applicable to the payment of what, upon an account taken, shall be found to be due from him to the partnership, before it can be applied to the payment of his separate creditors.[m] The same rule will apply to any other property into which the partnership property may have been converted, so far and so long as its original character and identity can be distinctly traced,[n] and hence no separate creditor of any partner can, merely as such creditor, take any portion of the partnership effects, by process or otherwise, except for so much as belongs to that partner, and his share or balance after all prior claims thereon are deducted and satisfied.[o]

Each Partner has also a specific lien on the present and future property of the partnership, the stock brought in, and everything coming in lien, during the continuance and after the determination of the partnership, not only for the payment of debts due to third persons, but also for the amount of his own share of the partnership stock, and for all moneys advanced by him beyond that amount for the use of the partnership, as also for moneys abstracted by his copartners beyond the amount of his share.[p] This lien attaches on real estate held by the partnership for partnership purposes, as well as upon the personal estate,[q] and is co-extensive with the transactions on joint account.[r]

Each Partner is Liable to pay the whole Partnership Debts. In what proportion the partners shall contribute is a matter merely among themselves.[s] Universally whatever agreement may exist among the partners themselves, stipulating for a restricted responsibility, and however limited may be the extent of his own separate beneficial interest in, and however numerous the members of the partnership, each individual member is liable for the joint debt to the whole extent of his property.[t]

The act or admission of one partner in legal proceedings, as also notice to or by one partner, as a general rule, is held to be binding on the firm.[u] In an action against partners, one may enter an appearance for the rest,[v] but not to bind them personally and individually when not within the jurisdiction, and not served with process.[w] Where one partner released an action after the firm had instructed their attorney to proceed to trial, the court refused to interfere.[x] And it seems that one partner has also the power of suspending proceedings in an action.[y] One partner may give notice of abandonment under a policy of insurance for all.[z] Notice of dishonor to one of several partners, joint indorsers of a bill or note, is notice to all.[a] One partner may act for the others in proceedings under the bankrupt laws,[b] except in the case of a petition for a fiat.[c]

Power to Bind the Firm outside of Partnership Transactions, etc. A partner derives no authority from the mere relation of partnership to bind the firm as the guarantor of the debt of another,[d] or as a party to a bill or note for the accommodation of, or as a mere and avowed surety for another.[e] In neither of these cases can the act of one partner bind the firm, unless there be a special authority for the purpose, or one to be implied from the common course of business, or the previous course and habit of dealing, with the knowledge and consent of the firm, or unless the transaction is subsequently adopted by the firm.[f] Whether it appears upon the instrument or in some other way, that the contract is one of guaranty, suretyship, or accommodation, the burden of proof is upon the party holding it, if he took it, knowing such to be the character of the contract, to show the facts necessary to render it available against the firm.[g] Direct or positive proof is not necessary; the authority or ratification may be inferred from circumstances.[h]

The Act of a Partner wholly unconnected with the business of the Partnership does not bind the firm.[i] Still a partner may bind the firm in matters out of the usual course of the business of the firm, if those matters arise out of, and are connected with, the regular transactions of the firm.[j] If one partner is a trustee, and he improperly employs the trust funds in the partnership business, his knowledge that he is doing so is not imputable to the firm.[k]

If a partner applies partnership funds to the payment of his own debts this act is void, although the creditor did not know that the funds belonged to the partnership.[l] And where any creditor of one member of the firm takes from him either in payment or security for his debt the paper of the firm, he takes it in fraud of the firm, and the firm will not (unless their interest, or assent and authority be shown) be held.[m]

Contracts to Convey Real Estate. Contracts by Deed, etc. One partner without authority, express or implied, from circumstances cannot bind the firm by a contract to convey real estate of the partnership unless there be a subsequent ratification or adoption of the contract.[n] One partner has no implied authority to bind his copartners by deed,[o] but a deed made by one partner in the name and for the use of the members of the firm will bind the other partners, if they assent to it or subsequently adopt it; and this consent or adoption may be by parol.[p] So one partner may bind the firm to a conveyance by deed of the effects of the firm which he might have conveyed without deed. The mere circumstance of annexing a seal to the instrument in such a case does not annul a transfer so consummated.[q] A deed of assignment of the partnership property, executed by one partner as his deed only, passes his interest in the property.[r] The rule that one partner cannot bind his copartners by deed does not extend to releases;[s] as a release by one partner is a release by all, so a release to one partner is a release to all.[t]

The power of a partner to dispose of the property of the firm does not extend to real estate held by the partnership; one partner cannot convey away real estate of the firm without special authority.[u]

Upon the decease of one of several partners his personal representatives become tenants in common with the surviving partners.[v] Still, as the surviving partner stands chargeable with the whole of the partnership debts, he takes the partnership property by survivorship, for all purposes of holding and administering the estate, until the effects are reduced to money, and the debts paid.[w] The debts of the partnership must be collected in the name of the surviving partner.[x]

Profits, Distribution of. As between the partners, they may by agreement stipulate for equal or unequal shares in the profit and loss of the partnership,[y] but in the absence of any express agreement or stipulation between them, and of all controlling evidence and circumstances, the presumption is held to be that they are interested in equal shares.[z] And the circumstance that each partner has brought an unequal amount of capital into the common stock, or that one or more have brought in the whole capital, and the others have only brought industry, skill, and experience, would not seem to furnish any substantial ground of difference as to the distribution.[a] Whether a partnership includes the capital stock, or is limited to the profit and loss, must be determined from the agreement and intention of the parties.[b]

A bona fide sale, for a valuable consideration, by one partner to another, of all the partnership effects, is valid, and the property so conveyed becomes the separate estate of the purchaser, although the firm and both partners are at the time insolvent.[c]

Mutual Rights—Obligations. Good faith, reasonable diligence, and skill, and the exercise of a sound judgment and discretion, lie at the very foundation of the relation of partnership. The same rules and tests are to be applied to the conduct of partners as are ordinarily applied to that of trustees. Indeed, the functions, rights, and duties of partners in a great measure comprehend both those of trustees and agents.[d] If the partnership suffers loss from the gross negligence, unskilfulness, fraud, or other wanton misconduct of a partner in the partnership business, or from a known deviation from the partnership articles, he is ordinarily responsible over to the other partners for all losses and damages sustained thereby.[e] A party withdrawing the funds of the concern, thereby diminishing the stock, and applying it to his own use, shall account to the others for the injury.[f] But if one partner, acting fairly, and for the best in his judgment, causes a loss, he is not answerable to the others.[g] Not only gross frauds, but intrigues for private benefit, are clearly offences against the partnership at large, and, as such, are relievable.[h]

As it is the duty of the partners to devote themselves to the interests of the concern, to exercise due diligence and skill for the promotion of the common benefit of the partnership, it follows that they must do it without any reward or compensation, although the services performed by the partners are very unequal in amount and value, unless there is an express stipulation for remuneration.[i] So no partner has a right to engage in any business or speculation which must necessarily deprive the partnership of a portion of his skill, industry, or capital,[j] nor to place himself in a position which gives him a bias against the discharge of his duty,[k] nor to make use of the partnership stock for his own private benefit,[l] nor to introduce a stranger into the concern.[m] Each partner should keep precise accounts, and have them always ready for inspection.[n]

In all ordinary matters relating to the partnership, the powers of the partners are co-extensive, and neither has a right to exclude another from an equal share in the management of the concern, or from the possession of the partnership effects.[o] A partner ought not to transcend the ordinary privileges of a partner by incurring extravagant and unnecessary expense in the management of the concern, though for partnership purposes.[p] The weight of authority is in favor of the power of a majority of the firm acting in good faith, to bind the minority in the ordinary transactions of the partnership, and when all have been consulted.[q]

It is the duty of those upon whom, by appointment or otherwise, it devolves, after the dissolution of a firm, to wind up the affairs of the partnership, to act for the best advantage of the concern, to make no inconsistent use of the property, and to seek no private advantage in the composition of debts, or in any other transaction in the performance of this business.[r] Nor, in this case, can any partner claim any commission for getting in the debts, or, in any other particular, reward or compensation for his trouble.[s]

Right of Action between. A partner may sue a copartner on an express agreement to do any act not involving a consideration of the partnership accounts.[t] And if partners finally balance all their accounts, or a distinct part thereof is entirely severed by them from the rest, a suit is maintainable for the balance.[u] But one partner cannot sue a copartner at law in respect to any matter growing out of the transactions of the partnership, and involving an examination of partnership accounts.[v] If one of a partnership who are plaintiffs be also one of a partnership who are defendants, the action cannot be maintained; for the same party cannot be plaintiff and defendant of record in the same action.[w]

—— NAME.

FIRM is the persons composing a partnership, taken collectively. The name, style or title under which the members of a partnership transact business.

The word is used as synonymous with partnership. The words "house," "concern," and "company," are also used in the same sense. This name is in point of law conventional, and applicable only to the persons who, on each particular occasion when the name is used, are members of the firm. A firm is usually described in legal proceedings as certain persons trading or carrying on business under, and using the name, style, and firm of, etc.[a]

It may be that the names of all the members of the partnership appear in the name or style of the firm, or that the names of only a part appear, with the addition of "and company" ("& Co."), or other words indicating a participation of others, as partners in the business,[b] or that the name of only one of the partners, without such addition, is the name of the firm. It sometimes happens that the name of neither of the partners appears in the style of the firm. The proper style of the firm is frequently agreed upon in the partnership articles; and where this is the case, it becomes the duty of every partner, in signing papers for the firm, to employ the exact name agreed upon.[c] This may be necessary, not only to bind the firm itself,[d] but also to prevent the partner signing from incurring a personal liability both to third persons and to his copartners.[e] So, the name which a partnership assume, recognize, and publicly use, becomes the legitimate name and style of the firm, not less so than if it had been adopted by the articles of copartnership,[f] and the partner has no implied authority to bind the firm by any other than the firm-name thus acquired.[g] Wherefore, where a firm consisted of J. B. and C. H., the partnership name being J. B. only, and C. H. accepted a bill in the name of J. B. & Co., it was held that J. B. was not bound thereby.[h]

NO FIXED NAME. If a firm have no fixed name, a signing by one, in the name of himself and company, will bind the partnership,[i] and a note in the name of one, and signed by him "for the firm," etc., will bind the company.[j] Where the business of a firm is to be carried on in the name of B. & D., a signature of a note by the names and surnames of the respective parties is a sufficient signature to charge the partnership.[k] Where a written contract is made in the name of one, and another is a secret partner with him, both may be sued upon it.[l]

INDIVIDUAL'S NAME USED, ETC. Where partners agree that their business shall be conducted in the name of one person, whether himself interested in the partnership business or not, that is the partnership name, and the partners are bound by it.[m] Where that name is the name of one of the partners, and he does business also on his own private account, a contract signed by that name will not bind the firm, unless it appears to have been entered into for the firm; but, if there be no proof that the contract was made for the firm, the presumption will be that it was made by the partner on his own separate account, and the firm will not be responsible.[n]

IDENTITY OF NAME. The name of the firm should be distinct from the names of all other firms. When there is confusion in this respect, the partners composing one firm may, in some cases, be made responsible for the debts of another.[o] Merchants and lawyers have different notions respecting the nature of a firm. Merchants are in the habit of looking upon a firm as a body distinct from the members composing it.[p] The law looks to the partners themselves; any change among them destroys the identity of the firm; what is called the property of the firm is their property, and what are called the debts and liabilities of the firm are their debts and their liabilities. In point of law, a partner may be the debtor or creditor of his copartners; but he cannot be either debtor or creditor of the firm of which he is himself a member.[q]

Suits in Firm Name. A firm can neither sue nor be sued otherwise than in the name of the partners composing it. Consequently, no action can be brought by the firm against one of its partners, nor by one of its partners against it; for in any such action one person at least would appear both as plaintiff and defendant, and it is considered absurd for any person to sue himself even in form.[r] For the same reason, one firm cannot bring an action against another if there be one or more partners in both firms.[s] Whenever a firm is spoken of by its name or style, the courts admit evidence to show what persons did in fact constitute the firm at the time in question.[t]

Change in Name, etc. If persons trade or carry on a business under a name, style or firm, whatever may be done by them under that name is binding as much as if real names had been used.[u] Any change of the persons composing a firm is productive of a new signification of the name. If, therefore, a legacy is left to a firm, that is a legacy to those who compose it at the time the legacy vests;[v] and if a legacy is left to the representatives of an old firm, it will be payable to the executors or the survivors of the partners constituting the firm alluded to, and not to its successors in business.[w] Again, an authority given to a firm of two partners cannot, it would seem, be exercised by them and a third person afterwards taken into partnership with them.[x] A name may be a trade-mark; and, if it is, the use of it by others will be illegal, if they pass themselves or their own goods for the firm or the goods of the firm whose name is made use of.[y] Moreover, if this is done intentionally, the illegality will not be affected by the circumstance that the imitators of the trade-mark are themselves of the same name as those whose mark they imitate.[z]

LIMITED PARTNERSHIP.

The purpose of limited partnership is to enable a party to put into the stock of a firm a definite sum of money, and abide a responsibility and share a profit which shall be in proportion to the money thus contributed, and no more.[a] Partnerships of this kind are wholly unknown to the common law, and are authorized and regulated only by statute. See GENERAL STATUTES.

"The Congress shall have power to promote the progress of science and useful arts by securing for a limited time to authors and inventors the exclusive right to their respective writings and discoveries."—Constitution of the United States, Art. 1, Sec. 8.

Under this constitutional provision the Congress, in 1790, passed an act for the granting of patents by the State Department. By 1836 some 10,000 patents had been issued, and in that year an act was passed establishing the United States Patent Office. In 1870 the laws relating to granting of patents were quite fully revised and made to take the form in which they appeared in the Revised Statutes of 1875. Since then amendments have been added from time to time and as experience suggested, but the gist and spirit of the laws, as incorporated in the Revised Statutes of 1875, have been substantially preserved.

The bulk of patent legislation concerns the duties of the Commissioner of Patents and the practical working arrangements of his office. As this class of legislation is accurately and abundantly synopsized in the Rules of Practice of the Patent Office, which appear in the following pages, there will be no need of citing in this place, either in extenso or in synopsis, any other sections of statutes than those of general moment for business men and lawyers, and those which probably determine nine-tenths of the practice in matters pertaining to patents.

b-34 Barb. 553. c-3 Kent Comm. 36; 3 Denio, 435; 24 Penn. St. 344.

Sec. 475 of the Revised Statutes provides for the establishment of a Patent Office in the Department of the Interior.

Sec. 476, and subsequent sections, provide for a Commissioner of Patents and other officials, and for the working force, salaries, duties and general internal ensemble of the Patent Office.

Sec. 483 vests the establishment of regulations for the conduct and proceedings of the Patent Office in the Commissioner of Patents, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior.

Sec. 629 vests the Circuit Courts with original jurisdiction in "all suits at law or in equity arising under the patent and copyright laws of the United States."

Sec. 690 vests the Supreme Court with appellate jurisdiction in the cases specially provided for.

Sec. 711. The jurisdiction vested in the courts of the United States, in the cases and proceedings hereinafter mentioned, shall be exclusive of the courts of the several States. . . . . Fifth. All cases arising under the patent right or copyright law of the United States.

Sec. 973. When judgment or decree is rendered for the plaintiff or complainant, in any suit at law or in equity, for the infringement of a part of a patent, in which it appears that the patentee, in his specification, claimed to be original and first inventor or discoverer of any material or substantial part of the thing patented, of which he was not the original and first inventor, no costs shall be recovered unless the proper disclaimer, as provided by the patent laws, has been entered in the Patent Office before the suit was brought.

Sec. 4883 provides that all patents shall be issued in the name of the United States of America, under the seal of the Patent Office, and signed by the Secretary of the Interior, or under his direction, and countersigned by the Commissioner of Patents. Then they must be properly recorded.

Sec. 4884. Every patent shall contain a short title or description of the invention or discovery, correctly indicating its nature or design, and a grant to the patentee, his heirs or assigns, for the term of seventeen years, of the exclusive right to make, use and vend the invention or discovery throughout the United States and the Territories thereof. A copy of the specification and drawings shall be annexed to the patent and be a part thereof.

Sec. 4885 provides that patents shall bear date as of a day not later than six months after their allowance and notice sent to the patentee, and if the fee is not paid within that period the patent shall be withheld.

Sec. 4886. Any person who has invented or discovered any new and useful art, machine, mannfacture or composition of matter, or any new and useful improvement thereof, not known or used by others in this country before his invention or discovery thereof, and not patented or described in any printed publication in this or any foreign country before his invention or discovery thereof, or more than two years prior to his application, and not in public use or on sale in this country for more than two years prior to his application, unless the same is proved to have been abandoned, may, upon payment of the fees required by law, and other due proceedings had, obtain a patent therefor.

Sec. 4888 provides the requisites for applications for patents—description, specification and claim. All of its provisions appear in practical form under the head of "Applications." See (post) "Rules of Practice."

Sec 4918 relates to suits touching interfering patents, and Sec. 4919 to suits in damages for infringement of patents. If a verdict has been had for the plaintiff, the court may at its discretion raise the amount found in the verdict "not exceeding three times the amount of said verdict, together with costs."

Sec. 4920. In any action for infringement the defendant may plead the general issue, and having given notice in writing to the plaintiff or his attorney thirty days before, may prove on trial any one or more of the following special matters:

1. That for the purpose of deceiving the public the description and specification filed by the patentee in the Patent Office was made to contain less than the whole truth relative to his invention or discovery, or more than is necessary to produce the desired effect; or,

2. That he surreptitiously or unjustly obtained the patent for that which was in fact invented by another, who was using reasonable diligence in adapting and perfecting the same; or,

3. That it has been patented or described in some printed publication prior to his supposed invention or discovery thereof, or more than two years prior to his application for the patent thereof; or,

4. That he was not the original or first inventor or discoverer of any material and substantial part of the thing patented; or

5. That it had been in public use or on sale in this country for more than two years before his application for a patent, or had been abandoned to the public.

And in notices as to proof of previous invention, knowledge, or use of the thing patented, the defendant shall state the names of the patentees and the dates of their patents, and when granted, and the names and residences of the persons alleged to have invented or to have had the prior knowledge of the thing patented, and where and by whom it had been used, and if any one or more of the special matters alleged shall be found for the defendant, judgment shall be rendered for him with costs. And the like defences may be pleaded in any suit in equity for relief against the alleged infringement; and proofs of the same may be given upon like notice in the answer of the defendant, and with the like effect.

Sec. 4921 vests the power to issue injunctions in restraint of violations of rights secured by patent in the respective courts of jurisdiction, and limits the time of bringing suits for damages to six years before filing complaint.

Sec. 4929 extends the right of patent to inventor and producer of "a new and original design for a manufacture, bust, statue, alto-relievo or bas-relief; any new and original design for the printing of woolen, silk, cotton or other fabrics; any new and original impression, ornament, patent (pattern), print or picture to be printed, painted, cast or otherwise placed on or worked into any article of manufacture, or any new, useful or original shape or configuration of any article of manufacture, the same not having been known or used by others before his invention or production thereof, or patented or described in any printed publication," upon payment of the prescribed fee and other proceedings had as in the case of procuring a usual patent.

Sec. 4933 provides a penalty of $250, and all excess of profit over that amount, for the use of any patented design, by manufacture, sale or otherwise, without the consent of the owner.

RULES OF PRACTICE
In the United States Patent Office.

ABANDONMENT. This may be abandonment (1) of the Invention, and (2) of the Application. Public use by any person more than two years before the application for a patent constitutes an abandonment of the invention. Publication of the invention more than two years before application for patent is an abandonment. Patentable matter, not described or claimed in an application for patent, is abandoned.

An application for a patent will be regarded as abandoned unless completed and prepared for examination within one year after the filing of petition, or upon failure of applicant to prosecute the same within one year after any action thereon, unless it can be shown that delay was unavoidable. Notice of action by the Patent Office will be given, and if failure to prosecute the application within a year thereafter continues the application will be declared abandoned. An applicant may also abandon by filing a written notification of abandonment, signed by himself or assignee, fully identifying his application. Commissioner of Patents may revive an application where delay is shown to have been unavoidable.

ADMINISTRATORS. In case of the death of an inventor during the time intervening between the filing of his application and the granting of a patent thereon, the letters patent may issue to the administrator or executor upon proper intervention by him.

AFFIDAVITS. Affidavits, whose admission or exclusion is judged of under prevailing equity rules, are received to overcome references on rejection of applications for patents, in support of applications for reissue, to establish priority of invention, and in cases after appeal taken.

AMENDMENTS. An applicant has a right to amend before or after the first rejection or action, and as often as the examiner presents new references or reasons for rejection; but not after appeal, unless a verified and sufficient reason is shown why the amendment was not earlier offered. In every amendment the exact words to be stricken out or inserted must be specified, and on sheets of paper written on one side, and separated from the other papers on file. Amendatory clauses must be wholly rewritten, without interlineations or erasures, and signed, where required, by the applicant, and in case of assignment by the assignee. All amendments to original applications capable of illustration by drawing or model must conform to at least one of such models or drawings as it was at the time of the application. Matter involving entire departure from the original invention can only be claimed by separate application. Specifications and drawings must be amended when required, to correct inaccuracies and prolixity, and to reconcile the claim, specification and drawing. Amendments to the specification will not be received during pendency for interference, except under certain prescribed conditions as to the law and practice relating to Interference. The following is a usual form of amendment:

To the Commissioner of Patents:
In the matter of my application for letters patent for an improvement in ——, filed ——, 19— (serial number ——), I hereby amend my specification as follows:
By striking out all between the —— and —— lines, inclusive, of page ——;
By inserting the words "——" after the word "——" in the —— line of the —— claim; and
By striking out the —— claim and substituting therefor the following:

—— —— —— —— —— —— ——

Signed at ——, in the county of ——, and State of ——

By ——
His Attorney in Fact.

APPEALS. An applicant for patent whose claim has been twice rejected by a primary examiner may appeal to the examiners-in-chief, on payment of a fee of $10. The appeal must be in writing, set forth the points of the decision upon which it is taken, and be signed by the applicant or his attorney or agent. The primary examiner shall within five days furnish the examiners-in-chief with the entire grounds of his decision, a copy of which must be furnished the appellant. An appeal lies from the decision of the examiners-in-chief to the Commissioner, on payment of $20. Cases heard and decided by the Commissioner on appeal will not be reopened except on his order. In interference and ex parte cases appeal lies from the decision of the Commissioner to the District Court of Columbia. In such appeals appellant must file in the Patent Office, in writing, and within 40 days, his reasons for appeal. In patent cases appeals lie from the United States Circuit or District Courts to the United States Circuit Court of Appeals, and thence to the United States Supreme Court when instruction is desired on any question or proposition of law. A form of appeal from a principal examiner to the examiners-in-chief runs as follows:

To the Commissioner of Patents:
Sir: I hereby appeal to the examiners-in-chief from the decision of the principal examiner in the matter of my application for letters patent for an improvement in ——, filed ——, 19—, serial number ——, which, on the —— day of ——, 19—, was rejected the second time. The following are the points of the decision on which the appeal is taken: (Statement of the points.)
Signed at ——, in the county of ——, and State of ——, this —— day of ——, 19—.

In case of an interference the appeal would run thus:

To the Commissioner of Patents:
Sir: I hereby appeal to the examiners-in-chief from the decision of the examiner of interferences in the matter of the interference between my applications for letters patent for improvement in —— and the letters patent of ——, in which priority of invention was awarded to said ——. The following are assigned as reasons of appeal: (Here should follow an explicit statement of alleged errors in the decision of the examiner of interferences.)
Signed at ——, in the county of ——, and State of ——, this —— day of ——, 19—.

APPLICANTS AND APPLICATIONS. As to who may apply for a patent, see Sections 4886, 4929, ante. Applicants need not visit Patent Office. Should conduct business by correspondence, personally or by attorney. Must be courteous and decorous. Will be informed with serial number of their application.

Applications must be made by petition, signed by the inventor, if alive, and addressed to the Commissioner of Patents. A complete application comprises the first fee of $15, a petition, specification and oath, and drawings, model or specimen, when required. Petition and specification must be in the English language. A guardian of an insane person, or executor or administrator of a deceased inventor, may make application and secure patent. The specification must be signed and witnessed by two witnesses. Inventor must judge for himself of the propriety of making application. Patent Office cannot help him, but its records are open to him. All parts of a complete application should be deposited in the Patent Office at the same time, and all papers should be attached together. Incomplete applications will not be filed. If applicant neglect to prosecute his application for one year after last official notice of any action taken by Patent Office, he abandons his application. Applications will not be filed till all their parts, except model or specimen, are received. They will be numbered in the annual series. Two or more inventions cannot be claimed in one application unless they are connected. No reservation will be made for future applications. An applicant, if inventor, must make oath that he believes he is first inventor or discoverer of the machine, or other article, for which he solicits a patent; that he resides in such and such a country; that his invention has not been before patented to himself or others in this or any other country for more than two years prior to his application; that, if so, the foreign countries shall be mentioned; that the invention has not been used or sold in the United States, nor described in publication or patent in this or any foreign country for more than two years prior to the application in this country. Applicants for reissue must also make oath. So also guardians, administrators and executors, when applicants. Caveats and pending applications are kept secret in Patent Office. After patent granted, all models, specifications and documents are open for inspection. Applications are, as a rule, taken up in the order of filing, but there is a class of privileged cases. After abandonment or forfeiture, good cause must be shown for renewal of application, and that within two years.

An approved form of petition by sole inventor is as follows:

To the Commissioner of Patents:
Your petitioner, ——, a citizen of the United States and a resident of ——, in the county of ——, and State of —— (or subject, etc.), whose post-office address is ——, prays that letters patent may be granted to him for the improvement in ——, set forth in the annexed specification.
Signed at ——, in the county of ——, and State of ——, this —— day of ——, 19—.

The above form, with manifest changes, will answer as the petition by joint inventors, inventor and assignee, applicants by power of attorney, administrators, executors and guardians.

ARGUMENTS. Arguments in contested cases before the commission or examiner-in-chief will be heard on appointed days and hours. Oral arguments in contested cases are limited to one hour for each party; in other cases to a half hour each. Applicants have right to open and close in contested cases, unless otherwise ordered. Appellants must file a brief of arguments and authorities before the day of hearing, which brief, in contested cases, must be printed.

ASSIGNEE AND ASSIGNMENT. Patents may be assigned by an instrument in writing, which must be recorded in the Patent Office within three months of the date thereof. See FEES (post). But an unrecorded assignment is valid except as against a bona fide purchaser. Application for a patent may be assigned, and patent will then issue to patentee, if request be made before payment of final fee. Right to bring suit for damages may be assigned with patent. Assignee of an undivided interest in a patent cannot alone bring suit for infringement. All interests must join. An assignee of territorial right may sue in his territory. A mere licensee cannot sue. Certificate of notary, commissioner, or consul, under seal, is prima facie evidence of validity of an assignment. When application for patent is in part assigned, the Patent Office will correspond with the inventor or his agent; if entire interest is assigned, with the assignee. A part assignee must join in all proceedings requiring the inventor's signature. Assignment, to secure record, must fully identify the patent or application to which it relates.

The following approved form of assignment of entire interest in an invention before the issue of letters patent will, mutatis mutandis, answer for assignment of entire interest in letters patent, for an undivided interest, and for territorial interest. See also assignment forms, p. 97.

Whereas I, ——, of ——, county of ——, and State of ——, have invented a certain new and useful improvement in ——, for which I am about to make application for letters patent of the United States; and whereas ——, of ——, county of ——, and State of ——, is desirous of acquiring an interest in said invention and in the letters patent to be obtained therefor;

Now, therefore, to all whom it may concern, be it known that, for and in consideration of the sum of —— dollars to me in hand paid, the receipt of which is hereby acknowledged, I, the said ——, have sold, assigned and transferred, and by these presents do sell, assign and transfer, unto the said —— the full and exclusive right to the said invention, as fully set forth and described in the specification prepared and executed by me on the —— day of ——, 19—; and I do hereby authorize and request the Commissioner of Patents to issue the said letters patent to the said ——, as the assignee of my entire right, title and interest in and to the same, for the sole use and behoof of the said —— and his legal representatives.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed my seal this —— day of ——, 19—. ——————— [L. S.]

See forms of Acknowledgment, p. 15 (ante).

ATTORNEYS. Applicants may prosecute their own cases, but are advised to employ competent patent attorneys. A register of qualified attorneys is kept in the Patent Office. They must file their powers of attorney before permitted to act. General powers of attorney are not recognized. All members of a firm or partnership must join in a power of attorney. When an attorney has filed his power, correspondence will be had with him only. Powers of attorney may be revoked when not satisfactory. May examine cases in attorneys' room, but not in examiners' room. May be refused recognition for misconduct. Attorneys may select associates.

An approved form of power of attorney after application filed is:

To the Commissioner of Patents:

The undersigned having, on or about the —— day of ——, 19—, made application for letters patent for an improvement in —— (serial number), hereby appoints ——, of ——, in the county of ——, and State of ——, his attorney, with full power of substitution or revocation, to prosecute said application, to make alterations and amendments therein, to receive the patent, and to transact all the business in the Patent Office connected therewith.

Signed at ——, in the county of ——, and State of ——, this —— day of ——, 19—.

BRIEFS. Attorneys must file, in case of appeal, and in printed form if possible, a brief of their authorities and arguments before the day fixed for hearing. The same must be done in interference cases, both directly and upon appeal.

CAVEATS. A caveat is a description of an incomplete invention, which an inventor who desires time to complete his invention may file in the Patent Office on payment of the proper fee. See FEES (post). It entitles the caveator to notice, within one year, of the filing of an application for a like invention. After such notice, the caveator must file a complete application within three months, or lose the benefit of his caveat. If the subject of the caveat has been already patented, it will be recorded, but not further noticed. No caveat should be filed if the inventor believes his invention to be complete. Caveats can only be filed by citizens of the United States, and by foreigners resident here for one year, who have filed their declarations to become citizens.

The following is an approved form of petition for a caveat:

To the Commissioner of Patents:

Your petitioner, ——, a citizen of the United States, and a resident of ——, in the county of ——, and State of —— (or subject of), whose post-office address is ——, represents:

That he has made certain improvements in ——, and that he is now engaged in making experiments for the purpose of perfecting the same, preparatory to applying for letters patent therefor. He therefore prays that the subjoined description of his invention may be filed as a caveat in the confidential archives of the Patent Office.

Signed at ——, in the county of ——, State of ——, this —— day of ——, 19—.

CLAIMS. Claims in a patent must follow the specification in specific and distinct form. May be withdrawn and new application therefor filed, when not in conflict in interference. Claims must be twice rejected before appeal can be had. A copy of rejected claims must accompany appeal. Matter not claimed in a patent is presumed to be old and abandoned. Like claims by two or more inventors are said to interfere, and may become the subject of interference adjudication. Claims not involved in interference may become the basis of a separate application.

COMMISSIONER. The Commissioner of Patents makes the rules and appointments of his office subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior. Appeals lie to him from primary and chief examiners, and thence to the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia.

COPIES. Copies of specifications, drawings and patents will be furnished at specified rates. See FEES (post). They may, when certified, be used in evidence where the original is not usable.

COMPOSITION OF MATTER. Applicants for patent on a compound must furnish not only the compound, but specimens of the ingredients. Patent may be declared void where relative proportions of substances are withheld or vaguely stated. Patent for a compound embraces the equivalents of its ingredients.

CORRESPONDENCE. All letters to the Patent Office should be addressed to the Commissioner of Patents. All business should be conducted by correspondence, postage prepaid. It will be conducted with the attorney, after his letter of attorney is filed, but if revoked, then resumed with the principal.

DATE, DURATION AND FORM OF PATENT. A patent bears date as of a day not later than six months from the time the application was passed and allowed. It is never antedated. Runs for seventeen years; but if of a design, may run for three and a half, seven, or fourteen years, as the applicant may elect in his application. A copy of the specifications and drawings will be annexed to the patent and form a part thereof.

DAMAGES. Damages for infringement not recoverable in suit, unless defendant was notified of the infringement, or the patented goods were marked "patented." Damages may be recovered by patentee or assignee, in action upon the case. Court may enter judgment for exemplary damages not exceeding three times the amount of actual damage. Damages for infringement of design patent will be at least $250. In suits for infringement the burden of proof is on the plaintiff. The profits of the defendant generally rule the amount of damage.

DEFENCE. See Sec. 4920 (ante).

DESIGN PATENTS. These are granted to inventors and producers of new and original designs for manufacture, bust, statue, alto-relievo, printing of woolen, cotton or silk, ornament, pattern, print or picture to be printed. The law and practice relating to the granting of them are similar to the case of other patents, except that they only run for three and a half, seven, or fourteen years, as the patentee may elect.

The following is an approved form of petition for letters patent for a design:

To the Commissioner of Patents:

Your petitioner, ——, a citizen of the United States and a resident of ——, in the county of ——, and State of —— (or subject of, etc.), whose post-office address is ——, prays that letters patent may be granted to him for the term of three years and a half (or seven years, or fourteen years) for the new and original design for ——, set forth in the annexed specification.

Signed at ——, in the county of ——, and State of ——, this —— day of ——, 19—.

DISCLAIMERS. When a patentee has claimed more than he was entitled to claim, he may file a disclaimer as to the excess. Failing to do so before the commencement of suit, he will forfeit his costs. Matter disclaimed ceases to be a part of the patent. The fee for filing ($10) must be paid in advance. A disclaimer must be in writing, attested by at least one witness. An approved form of disclaimer after patent is as follows:

To the Commissioner of Patents:

Your petitioner, ——, a citizen of the United States, residing at ——, in the county of ——, and State of ——, (or subject, etc.), represents that in the matter of a certain improvement in ——, for which letters patent of the United States No. —— were granted to ——, on the —— day of ——, 19—, he is (here state the exact interest of the disclaimant; if assignee, set out liber and page where assignment is recorded), and that he has reason to believe that through inadvertence (accident or mistake) the specification and claim of said letters patent are too broad, including that of which said patentee was not the first inventor. Your petitioner, therefore, hereby enters this disclaimer to that part of the claim in said specification which is in the following words, to wit:

——

Signed at ——, in the county of ——, and State of ——, this —— day of ——, 19—.

——

DIVISION. Two or more independent inventions cannot be claimed in one application; but where several distinct inventions are dependent upon each other and mutually contribute to produce a single result, they may be claimed in one application.

DRAWINGS. Drawings are required by law, where the nature of the case permits. They must show every feature of the invention; must be signed and attested by two witnesses; three editions to be printed and published by the office, when patented. Drawings form part of the specification. Are not complete evidence of invention, but there must be a description also. Drawings for patent applications are on cards 10 x 15 inches, flat, not folded, must be in solid lines, and same characters must refer to different views. In the patent they are reproduced by photo-lithography and attached to the patent. Must be furnished with application for the correction or reissue of a patent. When they accompany a caveat they must be on paper or muslin so as to be folded. Can only be corrected by approval of office. Office will correct on payment of cost thereof.

EMPLOYER AND EMPLOYEE. Employer does not become possessed to title of an invention by his employee.

EVIDENCE. See TESTIMONY.

EXAMINATION. Examinations are taken up in Patent Office in the order of filing the applications. But there are certain privileged cases, such as requests by heads of Government departments, applications for reissues, interfering applications, applications previously acted upon.

EXAMINERS. Interviews with examiners in their rooms can only be had during office hours, and at such times as they may designate, unless the Commissioner gives special orders in writing. For appeals from, see APPEALS.

EXCEPTIONS. Evidence in objection must be substantial. Party objecting must act as soon as aware of ground of objection, by giving notice to the office and to the opposite party.

EXECUTORS. See ADMINISTRATORS

EXPRESS AND FREIGHT CHARGES. These must be prepaid in full.

EXTENSION. Term of a patent cannot be extended except by act of Congress.

The final fee of $20 must be paid within six months after allowance of patent, or it will be withheld; but renewed application can be made on same papers on payment of a renewal fee ($15).

Witnesses in interference cases are allowed same fees as in United States Courts.

FOREIGN PATENTS. An inventor believing himself to be a first inventor is entitled to a patent, even though the invention had been known or used in a foreign country before his discovery thereof, but not if it had been before patented or described in any publication. Receipt of patent from a foreign country will not prevent inventor from receiving a patent in the United States, unless the application on which the foreign patent was issued was filed more than seven months prior to filing of the application in this country, in which case no patent will be granted in this country. Patents granted in the United States for seventeen years, dated prior to January 1, 1898, on inventions previously patented in a foreign country, will expire at the same time as the foreign patent. If there be more than one foreign patent, the United States patent expires with that one first to expire. But patents granted since January 1, 1898, are not limited in terms by foreign patents, except as to the seven months' time of application above mentioned. Patents may be obtained by citizens of the United States in those foreign countries with which conventions exist.

FORFEITURE. A patent is forfeited on failure to pay the final fee.

INFRINGEMENT. See DAMAGES.

INJUNCTION. The several courts having jurisdiction of patent cases have power to issue injunctions according to the principles of equity. To sustain an injunction it is not necessary that all the claims of the patent be infringed. The clear infringement of one valid claim is enough.

INVENTION. Invention, in law, is the finding out of something before unknown. It is not limited to the discovery of a new principle, but may be a new combination of old principles. It must be capable of practical use. Mere change of form without change of result is not invention. The mere function of a machine is not invention, although the machine may be. Production of a new and useful result is evidence of invention. Invention shown but not claimed may not bar other patents.

INTERFERENCES. An interference is a proceeding instituted for the purpose of determining the question of priority of invention between two or more parties claiming substantially the same patentable invention.

They are declared—(1) between original applicants each claiming the same subject matter; (2) between applicant and patentee, when, if within two years, the applicant makes oath that he made the invention before the patentee; (3) between an original and reissue application, or between reissue applications.

All questions in a pending application should be settled before an interference is declared. When interference is declared, the parties are notified and required to file preliminary statements under oath, giving the steps to the different inventions, the conceptions, disclosures, drawings, models, etc., in the completion of the invention. Where a part only of an application is involved, the rest may be patented on a separate application. After the filing of the preliminary statements, opponents have access to each other's papers. Where no interference appears in fact a contestant may move to dissolve the interference. Such motion is heard before a primary examiner. The burden of proof, in interference cases, is on the junior applicant. Testimony may be taken on due notice to opposing parties, with opportunity for cross-examination. It must be printed. Briefs may be filed and oral argument heard at a time fixed by the Patent Office. Decision is made, as to priority, by the examiner of interference. Appeal within limited time may be taken as in ex parte cases, on payment of proper fees. Any party may avoid the interference by filing a written concession of priority or a disclaimer of the invention.

The following is an approved form of Preliminary Statement of a domestic inventor in an interference case:

——————} Interference in the United vs. } States Patent Office.
——————} Preliminary statement of ——
——, of ——, in the county of ——, State of ——, being duly sworn (or affirmed), doth depose and say that he is a party to the interference declared by the Commissioner of Patents, ——, 19—, between ——'s application for letters patent, filed ——, 19—, serial number ——, and the patent to ——, granted ——, 19—, numbered ——, for a ——; that he conceived the invention set forth in the declaration of interference on or about the —— day of ——, 19—; that on or about the —— day of ——, 19—, he first made drawings of the invention (if he has not made a drawing, then he should say that no drawing of the invention in issue has been made); that on or about the —— day of ——, 19—, he first explained the invention to others, and that he first made a model showing such invention on or about the —— day of ——, 19— (if he has not made a model, then he should allege that no model of the invention in issue has been made); that he first embodied his invention in a full-sized machine, which was completed about the —— day of ——, 19—, and that on the —— day of ——, 19—, the said machine was first successfully operated, in the town of ——, county of ——, and State of ——, and that he has since continued to use the same, and that he has manufactured others for use and sale to the following extent, viz, (if he has not embodied the invention in a full-sized machine, he should so state, and if he has embodied it, but has not used it, he should so state).

ISSUE. A patent will issue on payment of final fee. After notice of allowance of application, the case will not be withdrawn from issue, except by approval of the Commissioner. The weekly issue closes on Thursday, and patents of that issue bear date the third Tuesday thereafter.

JOINT INVENTORS. Joint inventors are entitled to a joint patent; neither of them can obtain a patent for an invention jointly invented. Independent inventors of distinct improvements in same machine cannot obtain a joint patent for their separate inven tions. Where one invents and another fur nishes the capital they are not entitled to apply as joint inventors; but they may join if the inventor has assigned a part interest to the capitalist.

JOINT PATENTS. A joint patent may issue to joint inventors, or to an inventor and assignee, when assignment is made and recorded, and request made before payment of the final fee.

JURISDICTION. An examiner has no jurisdiction over a case after notice of allowance of the application. Applications, after appeal, are in the jurisdiction of the appellate tribunal until decision has been rendered, and are then returned to the primary examiner. The Circuit Courts of Appeal have final jurisdiction in patent cases, save in exceptional cases. See APPEALS. The United States Courts have jurisdiction in patent cases, to the exclusion of State Courts.

JURY TRIALS. The United States Courts may, when sitting in equity on patent cases, order a trial by jury, to which questions of fact may be submitted.

LABELS. Artistic labels may be recorded in the Patent Office on payment of a fee of $6. Such record gives no special status to the registrant.

LICENSE. License may be oral or written. See ASSIGNEE AND ASSIGNMENTS.

MANUFACTURE. An article of manufacture is a complete entity, ready for use. To be patentable, it must be new, useful and the result of invention. Mere change of material of which an article is composed is generally not patentable, if the material be old.

MARKING OF PATENTED ARTICLES. Patentees and manufacturers should give notice of the patent by marking on the article or package the date of the patent. If this is not done, a plaintiff cannot recover damages in an action for infringement, except on proof that the defendant was duly notified, and afterwards continued the infringement. A person who marks an unpatented article as patented, with intent to deceive, is liable to a fine of $100 for each offence, one-half to the person who brings suit, the other half to the United States.

MODELS. Are not required to be filed with the application. Will be called for if found necessary upon examination. They must clearly exhibit every feature of the machine which forms the subject of a claim for invention, but must exclude matter not sought to be patented. Must be neatly and substantially made of durable material, metal preferred; but when the material forms an essential feature of the invention, the model should be of that material. Must not be more than one foot in length, width or height, except when the Commissioner admits a working model of larger dimensions. If of wood, must be painted or varnished. Glue not to be used. Parts must be connected so as to resist heat and moisture. If possible, name of inventor should appear thereon. When model is not strong, examination will be suspended till a proper one is furnished. Model may be returned to applicant when claims have been rejected for over a year; in less than a year if applicant has not filed an abandonment. Not to be taken from office except in custody of sworn employee. Models used in contested cases may be returned to parties at their expense. If not claimed in a reasonable time, may be disposed of at discretion of Commissioner. In reissue applications, to correct errors in patents, the drawing can be corrected only by the model. Old models may be used with new applications. In application for a design a model will not be required when a sufficient representation can be made by a drawing.

MONEYS. See FEES.

MOTIONS. In contested cases reasonable notice of motions, copies of motion papers and affidavits must be served in accordance with the established rules of the office. Motions will not be heard in the absence of either party, except upon default after due notice. Will be heard first by officer or tribunal before which the case is pending. Appeal from a decision upon a motion may be taken to Examiners-in-Chief or to the Commissioner. The moving party has a right to the opening and closing argument.

NOTICE. In appeal to Court of Appeals of District of Columbia, appellant must notify Commissioner of Patents. In all equity proceedings in patent cases notice of taking of testimony must be given to opposing party. Same in interference cases. Proof of service of notice must go with the record filed in the Patent Office. Patent Office will notify a caveator immediately on the filing of a like patentable invention within one year after the filing of the caveat. Notice of all actions on applications for patent is given to applicants or their attorneys.

NOVELTY. Every patent raises the presumption of novelty. It is essential to patentability. Burden of proof is on the defendant to prove want of novelty.

OATH TO APPLICATION. Applicant for patent must make oath to originality of his invention. Must be made by inventor, if alive. May be made by administrator, executor, guardian or legal representative. Oath must accompany a caveat, stating that caveator is a citizen of the United States, or, if an alien, that he has resided in the United States for one year, and declared his intention to become a citizen, and that he believes himself to be the first and original inventor of the subject matter of the caveat. Applicant for correction of patent by a reissue must make oath setting forth in full why he seeks to thus correct. All oaths must bear signature of affiant. Oaths may be made in the United States before any officer qualified to administer them; but if officer has no seal, he must be certified to by a court of record. In foreign countries oaths may be made before a United States minister, consul, or notary public. The following approved form of oath by an inventor, to accompany his application, will answer, mutatis mutandis, for other classes of applicants:

If no application has been filed, strike out the words "except as follows").

See above as to officers without seals.

OFFICERS. Officers and employees of the Patent Office are prohibted from having any interest in a patent, save by inheritance or bequest. Officials of United States Government may obtain patents without payment of fees, provided they relinquish all title to the invention.

OFFICIAL ACTION. Will be based exclusively on the written record. Patent Office cannot act as adviser.

OFFICIAL BUSINESS. Should be transacted in writing.

OFFICIAL GAZETTE. Published weekly by Patent Office. Contains claims and generally part of the drawings of patents granted that week; also all important decisions of office and courts in patent cases. Mailed free to each State capital and to eight public libraries in each Congressional district. Private subscription $5 per year; foreign subscription $10 per year; single copies ten cents.

OFFICIAL FEES. See FEES.

OWNERS. Joint owner of patent can sue his co-owner for infringement. Joint owner can only assign in respect of his own share. Joint owners of patent are held to be tenants in common. All parties to title in patent become parties to a suit, whether plaintiffs or defendants. Disputants of a title should be made defendants.

PATENTABILITY. To secure patent, an inventor must have produced a new or improved machine, manufacture, article or composition of matter, or have made an improvement in an art, method or process. To devote an old thing to new use, without change, is not patentable; but to change an old thing so as to make it capable of new use is generally patentable. Mere change of form without change of result is not patentable. To be patentable an invention need not be superior to all others, but it must be new, useful and a result of invention. A mere result is not patentable, but the means by which a result is attained may be. A mere idea is not patentable. Bookkeeping and teaching systems are not patentable; nor are abstract principles.

PATENTS. All matter connected with granted patents are accessible to the public—"Patent" implying "public." Applications for patents are kept in the secret archives of the office Patents are entirely the creation of statute law, and to be valid must conform to the statutes. They are granted only for the subject matter mentioned in Sec. 4886 (see ante). Designs are excepted. See DESIGN PATENTS (ante). Foreign use of a patent is no bar to patentability, if the statutory requirements of novelty and originalty are complied with. Publication of a patent anywhere in the world for more than two years before application filed is a bar to a patent. Patents are issued in the name of the United States, under seal of the Patent Office, signed by Secretary of Interior, countersigned by Commissioner of Patents, and recorded in Patent Office. An allowed application is not issued as a patent unless final fee ($20) is paid within six months. But the application may be once renewed within 18 months after forfeiture, on payment of first fee ($15). A valid patent must so specifically describe the invention as to enable a person skilled in the art to which it most nearly relates to use the invention; and it must distinctly claim the part, improvement or combination which the inventor records as his own. A patent is personal property. Patentee cannot have two valid patents for same invention, but separate patents for separate parts of an invention may be valid. Patentee is entitled to all the uses of which his invention is capable, though he may not have contemplated all of them. A patent claiming the entire machine is good for the actual invention only. If the claims cover less than the actual invention, the patent is to that extent inoperative. A patent is lawfully granted only to the first and original inventor of the patentable matter under statutory regulation, or to his executor, administrator, guardian or assignee. Patent may issue in whole or in part to an assignee, when so requested by the inventor, the assignment being of record.

PETITION. Application for patent must be by petition to Commissioner of Patents. See APPLICANTS AND APPLICATIONS.

POSTAGE. Must be paid in full.

POWERS OF ATTORNEY. See ATTORNEYS.

PRACTICE. Equity rules of the Supreme Court obtain in all the courts. Objections not taken in the answer cannot be raised on hearing. On appearing in the suit a party becomes amenable to the jurisdiction of the court. Where complaint joins several causes of action defendant may demur to part and answer as to the rest. If parts of a bill are maintainable, demurrer to the whole will be overruled. Preliminary injunctions are generally denied, but where a decree has been obtained in one jurisdiction, injunction may be asked for in another jurisdiction. Experts may be examined to explain art terms and status, but their opinions are of value only when based on satisfactory reasons. The rules of equity of the United States Courts are followed in the practice of the Patent Office, so far as the same apply.

PRELIMINARY STATEMENT. In interference cases a preliminary statement, in the nature of pleading, must be filed by each party under oath in the time fixed in the declaration of interference. Contestant will be bound by his statement therein, to the extent that he cannot introduce evidence at variance with it. Such statement must contain date of conception of the invention claimed, date of drawing, model, disclosure, reduction to practice, and extent of use of the invention. It must be sealed before filing and addressed to Examiner of Interferences, Patent Office. It must be endorsed with the title of the interferences, the subject matter involved and the name of the party filing it. Such statements may be amended. They are opened by the examiner of interferences, and, if found satisfactory, are then subject to the inspection of opposing parties. If unsatisfactory, time for correction will be given.

Party failing to file satisfactory statement will be limited to record date of filing the application as the date of invention. For cause shown, upon motion, party notified of time to file preliminary statement may obtain an extension of time. An appeal lies from decision of examiner of interferences to Commissioner of Patents. Showing of reasons for amending preliminary statements must be very satisfactory.

PRIORITY OF INVENTION. The sole question to be determined in interference cases is the priority of invention. A prior inventor is one who first completes an invention in practical and operative form; not he who first conceives, discloses or makes drawings. A prior inventor must proceed with diligence to reduce his invention to practice, in order to hold his priority against another, later to conceive, but first to complete his invention. Application for a patent is supposed to mean the completion of the invention, whether reduced to practice or not.

PUBLICATIONS. See OFFICIAL GAZETTE.

RECORDS. Records of patents and models of inventions are open to public inspection. Records of applications not patented are secret, and only accessible by authority of applicant. Assignments of patents must be recorded within three months. Public records may be used in interference cases, with notice of intent to so use them. Official records must not be mutilated.

REHEARINGS. Rehearings of decided cases may be had only under equity rules.

REISSUES. Reissue of a patent is a proceeding to correct error in a patent, made by inadvertence, accident or mistake. The error must have been such as to render the patent inoperative or invalid in whole or in part. Application for reissue should be made as soon as possible after error discovered, and in any event within two years. A patentee may reissue at any time where he erred in claiming too much; but his disclaimer will generally reach the same result. A reissued patent runs only for the remainder of the term of the original. Reissued patents may be granted to original patentee, his legal representatives or assigns. Application for reissue must be sworn to by inventor, if living. See OATHS. Petition for reissue must be accompanied by abstract of title, and all owners of an interest must assent to the reissue. Original patent must be surrendered with the application for reissue. If lost, a certified copy must be furnished. After reissue suit cannot be brought for infringement of the original and surrendered patent. New matter may be introduced into a reissued patent, and more elaborate explanations of the original may be made. A drawing in a reissued patent may be corrected by the model, if one exists; otherwise the specification and drawing can be corrected only so as to make them conform. Where invention is divisible, reissue may be made in divisions. Matter cancelled in the original cannot enter into the reissue. Courts are strict to see reissue is for the same invention as the original.

The following is an approved form of petition, or application, for reissue by the inventor, to which assignee subscribes:

To the Commissioner of Patents:

Your petitioner, ——, a citizen of the United States and a resident of ——, in the county of ——, and State of —— (or subject, etc.), whose post-office address is ——, prays that he may be allowed to surrender the letters patent for an improvement in ——, granted to him ——, 19—, whereof he is now sole owner (or whereof ——, on whose behalf and with whose assent this application is made, is now sole owner, by assignment), and that letters patent may be reissued to him (or the said ——) for the same invention upon the annexed amended specification. With this petition is filed an abstract of title, duly certified, as required in such cases.

Signed at ——, in the county of —— and State of ——, this —— day of ——, 19—.

——————————

[Assent of assignee to reissue.]

The undersigned, assignee of the entire (or of an undivided) interest in the above-mentioned letters patent, hereby assents to the accompanying application. ——————————.

RENEWAL. A forfeited application may be renewed once, using the old papers. A caveat may be renewed frequently, on payment of a new fee, using the old papers. Renewal of application is forfeited by failure to complete or prosecute. See ABANDONMENT.

REVENUE STAMPS. Must be furnished by the parties in interest. Under existing law 25 cents for a power of attorney; 10 cents for a certificate furnished by Patent Office; 25 cents for conveyances offered for record, for each $500 in excess of $1000.

SERVICES OF NOTICES. Notices in interference cases for all parties must be given to the examiner of interferences by the primary examiner. The examiner of interferences forwards them to all the parties. In appeals to the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia the appellant must file notice thereof and statement of reasons with Commissioner of Patents within 40 days of date of decision appealed from. In contested cases reasonable notice of all motions must be served upon opposing parties, and their service proved. So, for taking testimony, and for discovery on appeal.

SIGNATURES. Applications and oaths must be signed by inventor, if alive, otherwise by his legal representatives or assigns. So, of abandonments, specifications, drawings, models, disclaimers, concessions, etc.

SPECIFICATION. Specification of a patent is required by law to be full, clear and exact, without being prolix. It must carefully distinguish what is new from old. Where it includes drawings, they must be described and referred to by figures or letters. Specification should state the name and object of the invention, describe it with relation to the drawing, if any, and close with distinct claims. Must be signed and sworn to by inventor, if living, and witnessed by two witnesses. Must be legibly written or printed on one side only of paper like legal cap, with wide left-hand margin. Amendments to specifications must conform to original invention, and must specify the exact part or parts to be cancelled, as well as all part or parts to be substituted. Must not be changed by applicant after execution, and will not be amended at office without written request, which becomes a part of the record. The following is an approved form of specification:

To all whom it may concern:

Be it known that I, ——, a citizen of the United States, residing at ——, in the county of ——, and State of —— (or subject of, etc.), have invented new and useful improvements in ——. The object of my invention is (here state object generally.)

In the drawings:

Fig. 1 is a (plan, section or elevation, as the case may be) of the improved ——.

Fig. 2, etc.

The reference letter A indicates, etc. (giving full description of all parts).

What I claim as new is:

(Here summarize under separate claims the parts supposed to be new.)

In testimony whereof I have signed my name to this specification in the presence of two witnesses.

Witnesses:

TESTIMONY. Testimony in all patent cases is taken and transmitted under rigid rules framed in accordance with Sec. 4905 of Revised Statutes. See NOTICE, INTERFERENCE, etc.

UNITED STATES COURTS. Have exclusive jurisdiction in patent cases; but contracts under patents may fall under local jurisdiction, as other contracts. Courts are jealous to secure the best possible testimony in patent cases, and expert evidence may be used.

USE. An inventor may, in law, make practical and experimental use of his invention without jeopardy to his right to a patent; but the use of a completed invention in public must be followed by application for patent within two years if inventor would preserve his rights. Foreign use of a device does not bar grant of a patent to original inventor. When prior use is set up as a defence, the defendant must give in his answer the names and residences of those having knowledge of such use.

WITNESSES. In interference cases witnesses may be summoned by any Commissioner of a United States Court, but will not be required to travel over forty miles. Witnesses failing to respond to a subpœna are in contempt of court.

LAWS, RULES AND PRACTICE RELATING TO TRADE-MARKS.

A trade-mark is any symbol, mark, name or other characteristic or arbitrary indication secured to the user by legal registration adopted and used, as by a manufacturer or merchant to designate the goods he manufactures or sells, and to distinguish them from the goods of a competitor.

The statutes relating to trade-maks are brief, and have changed but little since the trade-mark act of 1881. They provide, in substance, that owners of trade-marks used in commerce with foreign nations or Indian tribes, provided such owner be domiciled in the United States, or located in any foreign country or tribes, which, by treaty, convention, or law, affords similar privileges to citizens of the United States, may obtain registration of such trade-marks by complying with the following requirements:

First. Must record in Patent Office a statement of name, domicile, location and citizenship of party applying; class of merchandise, and description of goods of the class to which the trade-mark has been appropriated; description of the trade-mark, with fac-simile thereof, and statement of mode in which same is applied and fixed to goods, also length of time during which the trade-mark has been used.

Second. Must pay into Treasury of the United States $25, and comply with Patent Office regulations.

Sec. 2. Application prescribed must be accompanied by written declaration verified by person, member of firm, or officer of corporation applying, to the effect that such party has at the time a right to the use of the trade-mark sought to be registered, either in identical form or such close resemblance as not to deceive; that such trade-mark is used in commerce with foreign nations or Indian tribes, and that the description and fac-simile presented for registry truly represent the trade-mark sought to be registered.

Sec. 3. Time of receipt of application will be noted and recorded. No trade-mark will be registered unless same appears to be lawfully used by applicant in foreign commerce or with Indian tribes, as above, or is within the provision of a treaty, convention or declaration with foreign power; nor which is merely the name of the applicant; nor which is identical with a registered or known trade-mark owned by another, and appropriate to the same class of merchandise, or so similar as to lead to confusion or mistake, or to deceive purchasers. Application decides presumptive lawfulness of claim to the alleged trade-mark; and in dispute between applicant and previous registrant, or between registrants, he shall follow, so far as same is applicable, the practice of United States Courts of Equity in analogous cases.

Sec. 4. Certificate of registry of trade-mark shall issue in name of the United States, under seal of the Department of Interior, and signature of the Commissioner of Patents. A record thereof and printed copies of specifications to be kept in books for that purpose. Copies of trade-marks, and of statements filed therewith, and signed and sealed certificates of registry to be evidence in any suit respecting such trade-marks.

Sec. 5. Certificate of registry remains in force for thirty years from date, except when the trade-mark is claimed for and applied to articles not manufactured in this country, and in which it receives protection under laws of a foreign country for a shorter period, in which case it shall cease to have any force in this country, under this act, at the time it ceased to be exclusive property elsewhere. It may be renewed for a further thirty years on application made within six months of expiration of term.

Sec. 6. Applicants for registration are credited with any fee, or part thereof, before paid with intent to procure protection for same trade-mark.

Sec. 7. Registration of trade-mark is prima facie evidence of ownership. Any person who reproduces, counterfeits, copies, or colorably imitates a registered trade-mark, or fixes same to merchandise similar to that described in the registration, shall be liable to action in damages for wrongful use at suit of the owner, and he shall have remedy in equity by injunction to restrain such wrongful use in any court having jurisdiction over the guilty party. Courts of United States have original and appellate jurisdiction in such cases without regard to amount in controversy.

Sec. 8. No action or suit can be had when the trade-mark is used in unlawful business, or upon an injurious article, or has been used with design to deceive the public, or under certificate of registry fraudulently obtained.

Sec. 9. Any person procuring registry of trade mark, or of himself as owner, or entry respecting trade-mark, by false or fraudulent representation, orally or in writing, or by fraudulent means, is liable to pay any damages sustained in consequence thereof to the injured party, to be recovered in an action on the case.

Sec. 10. Nothing in the act shall prevent, lessen, impeach or avoid any remedy at law or in equity which a party aggrieved might have had for wrongful use of any trade-mark.

Sec. 11. Nothing in the act shall affect unfavorably a claim to trade-mark after the term of registration shall have expired; nor give cognizance to any United States Court in action for suit between citizens of the same State, unless the trade-mark in controversy is on goods intended to be exported to a foreign country or in lawful commercial intercourse with an Indian tribe.

Sec. 12. Commissioner of Patents is authorized to make rules, regulations and forms for transfer of right to use trade-marks and for recording such transfers.

Sec. 13. Citizens and residents wishing the protection of trade-marks in foreign countries, the laws of which require registration here, as a condition precedent to getting such protection there, may register their trade-marks for that purpose, as is above allowed to foreigners, and have certificates therefor from the Patent Office.

Sec. 11, of Act of July 24, 1897, prohibits the importation of goods which shall copy or simulate the name or trade-mark of any domestic manufacture or manufacturer.

Conventions for reciprocal registration of trade-marks were, by the beginning of 1901, entered into between the United States and Austria-Hungary, Belgium, Brazil, Denmark, France, Germany, Great Britain, Italy, Japan, Netherlands, Russia, Servia, Spain and Switzerland.

In obedience to the statutes the following rules governing the registration of trade-marks prevail in the Patent Office:

CORRESPONDENCE. Business with office to be conducted in writing. Except by consent of parties, action of office is based on written record. In case of disagreement or doubt, no attention paid to oral promises, stipulations or understandings. Applicants and attorneys to conduct business with decorum. Papers violating this requirement will be returned, after submission to commissioner, and by his order. All letters must be addressed to "Commissioner of Patents." Postal orders, checks or drafts should be to his order. Separate letters required for each distinct inquiry or application. Separate letters for separate complaints. Letters relating to applications must name applicant and date of filing; and to registered trade-marks must name registrant, number and date of certificate, and class of merchandise. Personal attendance of applicants at Patent Office not necessary. All business can be conducted by correspondence. Correspondence will be with attorneys who have filed their powers of attorney. Double correspondence with applicant and attorney forbidden. Copies of rules, with marked paragraphs, will be furnished as replies to inquiries for information the office is not otherwise authorized to give out. Express, freight, postage and other charges on matter sent to Patent Office must be prepaid.

ATTORNEYS. Applicant may prosecute own case, but advised to employ competent attorney. Office cannot aid in selection of attorney. Attorney must file power and be registered as qualified. General power of attorney not recognized. Written authorization must be filed with each application. All members of a firm or partnership must sign power of attorney. Revenue stamp (25 cents) must be affixed to each power of attorney. Attorney may select associate on written authority of principal. Power of attorney may be revoked on application to the Commissioner. He will be notified of revocation. On revocation, correspondence will be resumed with the applicant. For misconduct Commissioner may refuse to recognize any person or attorney, subject to approval of Secretary of Interior.

WHO MAY REGISTER TRADE-MARK.—

Trade-mark may be registered by any person, firm or corporation in the United States, or in any foreign country which, by treaty, convention or law affords similar privileges to citizens of the United States, and who is entitled to the exclusive use of any trade-mark and uses the same in commerce with foreign nations or Indian tribes; also, by any citizen or resident of this country wishing the protection of his trade-mark in any foreign country the laws of which require registration in the United States as a condition precedent, and who pays the legal fees, and conforms to legal requisites. Owners of trade-marks issued prior to July 8, 1870, may register for same goods without fee; but application pending before that date must be prosecuted under the rules subsequent to that date. No trade-mark will be registered unless it appears that the same is used by applicant in commerce between the United States and some foreign nation or Indian tribe, or is within the provisions of a treaty, convention or declaration with a foreign power, or which is merely the name of an applicant, or which is identical with a like trade-mark owned and used by another, or which is so nearly identical with another as to lead to confusion or to deceive purchasers.

APPLICATION. Application for trade-mark must be made to Commissioner of Patents and be signed by the owner. Its requisites are: (a.) A brief letter requesting registration, signed by applicant, and running as follows:

To the Commissioner of Patents:
The undersigned presents herewith a fac-simile of his lawful trade-mark, and requests that the same, together with the accompanying statement and declaration, may be registered in the United States Patent Office in accordance with the law in such cases made and provided.
Dated——, 19—, A. B.

(b.) A statement or specification which, as in patents, must discriminate between essential and non-essential features. If applicant be a corporation, the laws of what State or nation under which incorporated must be set forth.

(c.) A declaration or oath complying with the foregoing statutes.

(d.) A fac-simile of drawing or mark.

(e.) A fee of $25.

All must be in the English language, and written only on one side of the paper. Pending applications are preserved in secrecy. No information given out without consent of applicant.

OATH OR DECLARATION. When in the United States, may be before any one authorized to take oaths; in foreign country, before any minister, consul, charge d'affairs, notary. In all cases must be attested by official seal; or, if no seal, official character must be attested by a court of record or other officer with seal. Declaration cannot be amended. When faulty a new one must be filed.

DRAWING OR FAC-SIMILE. When drawing does not constitute a satisfactory fac-simile of the trade-mark, two copies of trade-mark as actually used must be deposited in addition to required drawing. Drawing must be upon white paper, as thick as three-sheet Bristol board; surface calendered and smooth; India-ink alone to be used to secure black and solid lines; size to be 10x15 inches; marginal line one inch from edges, leaving "sight" exactly 8x13 inches; all work and signatures to be within this margin. Drawings to be all made with pen only; every line, letter and signature to be in black, not too fine or crowded, but clear, sharp and solid; surface shading to be open. Signature of proprietor must be placed at lower right-hand corner, of witnesses at lower left-hand corner; all within marginal lines, but must not to encroach on drawing. For transmission drawings should be rolled, not folded. Office, at applicant's request, will furnish drawings at cost.

EXAMINATION. Applications for registration are first considered by trade-mark examiner. When registration is refused, applicant will be notified, and reasons for refusal given, together with information and references for aiding applicant to judge of propriety of a new application. Examinations are directed to merits, but examiner refers to all his objections.

AMENDMENTS. Statement may be amended for any reason arising in course of examination. In every amendment the exact words stricken out or inserted must be referred to and their place pointed out. Amendments must be on paper separate from papers filed, and written on one side only. Applicant must not make erasures, additions, insertions or mutilations of papers and records. Amendatory clauses must be wholly rewritten, and without erasures or interlineations. Amendments not permitted after notice of allowance of application, except on recommendation of examiner, approved by Commissioner. After completion of application, Office will not return papers, but will furnish copies.

INTERFERENCES. In case of conflicting applications, or disputes as to right to use, Office will declare interference, that parties may prove their priority of use. Proceedings will be, as near as may be, like those in patent interferences. See INTERFERENCE (ante).

APPEALS. Appeals, as in patent cases, lie from examiner and examiners-in-chief to Commissioner, without fee.

ISSUE, DATE AND DURATION. All requirements met, the Commissioner issues a certificate to applicant to the effect that he is entitled to the protection of his trade-mark. Attached to it are a fac-simile of the trade-mark and printed copy of his statement and declaration. Applicant must furnish revenue stamp. Weekly issue closes on Thursday, and the certificate bears date as of third Tuesday thereafter. Certificate remains in force for thirty years from date, except where trade mark is claimed for goods not manufactured in the United States, and in which it receives protection in a foreign country for a shorter period, then the term here ends with that abroad. Term may be extended for thirty years on application within six months of its expiration.

ASSIGNMENTS. Right to use of trade-mark is assignable, and assignment may be recorded in Patent Office, if in English, if application for registration shall have been first filed, and if the assignment fully identifies by serial number the application, date of filing, or where the mark has been registered, its certificate and date thereof. No particular form of instrument required, but see ASSIGNMENT (ante), and at p. 97.

COPIES AND PUBLICATIONS. After registry of trade-mark, printed copies of statement and declaration, with fac-simile, can be furnished on payment of the fee. Order for copy of assignment must give book and page of record and name of proprietor, or extra charge will be made for searching. Official Gazette of Patent Office contains a list of all registered trade-marks, names of registrants and statement of essential features.

Money paid in excess or by mistake will be refunded; but a mere change of purpose, as after filing application, will not entitle party to a return. Most of the forms prescribed in rules and practice as to trade-marks are so analogous to those relating to patents that, mutatis mutandis, the latter may be used. There are seventy-seven different classifications of registered trade-marks, and applicants must first ascertain to which class they belong.

PRINTS AND LABELS.

The "print and label" section of the patent, copyright and trade-mark statutes of the United States is construed as providing for the registration of any print or label without examination as to novelty. An adverse decision by the examiner of the registration of prints and labels will be reviewed by the Commissioner without fee. The word "print," as to registration, is defined as an artistic representation or intellectual production not borne by an article of manufacture or vendible commodity, but in some fashion pertaining thereto —such, for instance, as an advertisement thereof. The word "label," as to registration, is an artistic representation or intellectual production impressed or stamped directly upon the articles of manufacture, or upon a slip or piece of paper or other material, to be attached to manufactured articles, or to bottles, boxes and packages containing them, to indicate contents, name of manufacturer, place of manufacture, quality of goods, directions for use, etc. By "articles of manufacture," to which prints and labels are applicable under the statutes, is meant all vendible commodities produced by hand, machinery or art. No print or label can be registered unless it properly belongs to an article of commerce and is as above defined. Application for the registry thereof must be made to the Commissioner of Patents, and be signed by the proprietor or his agent. Certificate of such registration remains in force for twenty-eight years. It may be continued for fourteen years further on filing a second application.

Payment. See CONTRACTS.

PAYMENT is the fulfilment of a promise, or the performance of an agreement. The discharge, in money, of a sum due. The word payment is not a technical term; it has been imported into law proceedings from the exchange, and not from law treatises. When payment is pleaded as a defence, the defendant must prove the payment of money or something accepted in its stead made to the plaintiff, or some person authorized in his behalf to receive it.[a] Payment in its most general acceptation is the accomplishment of every obligation, whether it consists in giving or doing. In a more restricted sense payment is the discharge in money of a sum due.[b]

Payment must be made in coined money (or treasury notes made legal tender) if the creditor insists upon having it.[c] Copper cents are not legal tender under the United States Constitution.[d] Payment by merchant must be made in money or by bill.[e] But the creditor may waive this right, and anything which he has accepted as satisfaction for the debt will be considered as payment.

Upon a plea of payment, the defendant may prove a discharge in bank-notes. Negotiable notes of individuals, or a debt already due from the payee, delivered and accepted, or discounted as payment.[f] Bank-notes in conformity to usage and common understanding, are regarded as cash,[g] unless objected to.[h] Treasury notes are not cash.[i] Giving a check is not considered as payment; but the holder may treat it as a nullity if he derives no benefit from it, provided he has not been guilty of negligence, so as to cause injury to the drawer.[j]

Payment in forged bills is generally a nullity.[k] So also of counterfeit coin; but an agreement to sell goods and accept specific money is good, and payment of these coins is valid, even though they be counterfeit.[l] And the forged notes must be returned in a reasonable time, to throw the loss upon the debtor.[m] Payment to a bank of its own notes which are received and afterwards discovered to be forged is a good payment.[n] A forged check received as cash, and passed to the credit of a customer, is a good payment.[o] Payment in bills of an insolvent bank, where both parties were innocent, has been held no payment.[p] On the other hand, it has been held good payment.[q]

If a bill of exchange or promissory note be given to a creditor, and accepted as payment, it shall be a good payment.[r] But regularly a bill of exchange or note given to a creditor shall not be a discharge of the debt till payment of the bill, unless so accepted.[s] If a debtor gives his own promissory note, it is not payment, unless it is so expressly agreed,[t] and when so expressed it extinguishes the debt.[u] Whether there was such an agreement is a question for the jury.[v] And if payment be made in the note of a factor or agent employed to purchase goods, or intrusted with the money to be paid for them; if the note be received as payment it will be good in favor of the principal,[w] but not if received conditionally; and this is a question of fact for the jury.[x] A bill of exchange drawn on a third person, and accepted, discharges the debt as to the drawer.[y] And in an action to recover the price of goods, payment by a bill not dishonored has been held as good defence.[z] Retaining a draft on a third party an unreasonable length of time will operate as payment if loss be occasioned thereby.[a] In the sale of a chattel, if a note of a third person be accepted for the price, it is good payment.[b] Not so, however, if the note be the promise of one of the partners in payment of a partnership debt.[c]

Payment may be made through the intervention of a third party who acts as the agent of both parties; as, for example, a stakeholder. If money be deposited with him to abide the event of a legal wager, neither party can claim it until the wager is determined, and then he is bound to pay it to the winner.[d] If the wager is illegal, the depositor may reclaim the money any time before it is paid over.[e] So also with an auctioneer.[f]

A transfer of funds called by the civil law phrase a payment by delegation, is payment only when completely effected;[g] and an actual transfer of claim or credit assented to by all the parties is a good payment.[h] When money is sent by letter, even though the money is lost, it is good payment, and the debtor is discharged, if he was expressly authorized or directed by the creditor so to send it, or if such authority can be presumed from the course of trade.[i] But even if the authority be given or inferred, at least ordinary diligence must be used by the debtor to have the money safely conveyed.[j]

Payment must be of the whole sum; and even where a receipt in full has been given for a payment of part of an ascertained sum, it has been held not to be an extinction of the debt.[k] But payment of a part may be left to the jury as evidence that the whole has been paid;[l] and payment of a part at a different time,[m] or place,[n] or in any way more beneficial to the creditor than that prescribed by the contract, is good.[o] Giving a chattel, though of less value than the debt, is a discharge,[p] or rendering certain services, with the consent of the creditor,[q] or assigning certain property.[r] So if a stranger pay a part, or give his note for a part, and this is accepted, it is a good payment of the debt.[s] And where a creditor, by process of law, compels the payment of a part of his claim, this is generally a discharge of the whole.[t]

The Payment must have been Accepted Knowingly. Thus, if the money is counted out, and the payee takes a part and puts it in a bag, this is a good payment, and if any is lost it is the payee's loss.[u] Where A. paid B. £100, in the redemption of a mortgage, and B.

bade C. put it in his closet, and C. did so, and A. demanded his papers, which B. refused to deliver; and A. demanded back his money, and B. directed C. to give it to him, and C. did, it was held to be a payment of the mortgage.[v] Generally, there can be but little doubt as to acceptance and non-acceptance, and the question is one of fact for the jury to determine under the circumstances of each particular case. Of course, where notes or bank-bills are given in payment of the debt, the evidence that they were so given is to be the same as evidence of any other fact relating to payment.

PAYMENT INTO COURT is depositing a sum of money with the proper officer of the court by the defendant in a suit, for the benefit of the plaintiff and in answer to his claim.

In the absence of statutory provisions it may be made under a rule of court granted for that purpose, in which case notice of an intention to apply must, in general, have been previously given.

The effect is to divest the plaintiff of all right to withdraw the money[w] except by leave of court,[x] and to admit conclusively every fact which the plaintiff would be obliged to prove in order to recover the money;[y] as, that the amount tendered is due,[z] for the cause laid in the complaint,[a] to the plaintiff in the character in which he sues,[b] the jurisdiction of the court;[c] that the contract was made[d] and broken as alleged,[e] but only in reference to the amount paid in,[f] and nothing beyond such facts.[g]

Generally, it relieves the defendant from the payment of costs until judgment is recovered for a sum larger than that paid in.[h]

THE EFFECT of payment is: 1. To discharge the obligation; and it may happen that one payment will discharge several obligations by means of a transfer of the evidences of obligation.[i] 2. Payment does not prevent a recovery when made under a mistake of fact. The general rule is, that mistake or ignorance of law furnishes no ground to reclaim money paid voluntarily under a claim of right.[j] But acts done under a mistake or ignorance of an essential fact are voidable and relievable. Laws of a foreign country are matters of fact,[k] and the several United States are foreign to each other in this respect. In Kentucky and Connecticut there is a power of recovery equally, in cases of mistake of law and of fact.[l] In Ohio it may be remedied in equity.[m] In New York a distinction is taken between ignorance of law and mistake of law, giving relief in the latter case.[n] In England money paid under a mistake of law cannot be recovered back.[o] 3. Part payment of a note will have the effect of waiver of notice as to the whole sum. 4. Payment of a part of the debt will bar the application of the statute of limitations as to the residue,[p] even though made in goods and chattels.[q] But it must be shown conclusively that the payment was made as a part of the larger debt.[r]

EVIDENCE that anything has been done and accepted as payment is evidence of payment.

A receipt is prima facie evidence of payment; but a receipt acknowledging the reception of ten dollars and acquitting and releasing from all obligations, would be a receipt for ten dollars only.[s] And a receipt is only prima facie evidence of payment.[t] And it may be shown that the particular sum stated in the receipt was not paid, and also that no payment has been made.[u]

Payment may be presumed by the jury in the absence of direct evidence: thus, possession by the debtor of a security after the day of payment, which security is usually given upon payment of the debt, is prima facie evidence of payment by the debtor.[v] If the acceptor produce a bill of exchange, such possession is prima facie evidence of payment.[w]

Payment is also conclusively presumed from lapse of time. After twenty years' non-demand, unexplained, the court will presume a payment without the aid of a jury.[x] Facts which destroy the reason of this rule may rebut the presumption.[y] And a jury may infer a payment from a shorter lapse of time, especially if there be attendant circumstances favoring the presumption.[z]

A presumption may arise from the course of dealing between the parties on the regular course of trade; thus, after two years it was presumed that a workman had been paid, as it was shown that the employer paid his workmen every Saturday night, and this man had been seen waiting among others.[a]

A receipt for the last year's or quarter's rent is prima facie evidence of the payment of all the rents previously due.[b] If the last instalment on a bond is paid in due form, it is evidence that the others have been paid; if paid in a different form, that the parties are acting under a new agreement.

Where receipts have been regularly given for the same amount, but for a sum that was smaller than was due by the agreement, it was held evidence of full payment.[c]

WHEN TO BE MADE. Payment must be made at the exact time agreed upon. Where payment is to be made at a future day, of course nothing can be demanded till the time of payment, and, if there be a condition precedent to the liability, not until the condition has been performed. And where goods had been sold "at six or nine months' credit" the debtor was allowed the option.[d] Where no time of payment is specified, the money is to be paid immediately on demand.[e] When payment is to be made at a certain time, it may be made at a different time if the plaintiff will accept.[f] The debtor cannot compel the creditor to receive payment before the debt is due.

WHERE TO BE MADE. Payment must be made at the place agreed upon, unless both the parties consent to a change. If no place of payment is mentioned, the payer must seek out the payee.[g] So, too, the creditor is entitled to call for payment of the whole of his claim at one time, unless the parties have stipulated for payment in parcels. Questions of payment by executors, administrators, and guardians are regulated by statute. As a general rule debts are to be paid first, then specific legacies. The personal property is made liable for the testator's debts, and after that is exhausted, the real estate.

WHO MAY MAKE. Payment may be made by the primary debtor, and by other persons from whom the creditor has a right to demand it. An agent may make payment for his principal. An attorney may discharge the debt against his client.[h] One of any number of joint and several obligors, or one of several joint obligors, may discharge the debt.[i] Payment may be made by a third person, a stranger to the contract.

It may be stated generally, that any act done by any person in discharge of the debt, if accepted by the creditor, will operate as payment.

TO WHOM TO BE MADE. Payment is to be made to the creditor. But it may be made to an authorized agent. And if made in the ordinary course of business, without notice requiring the payment to be made to himself, it is binding upon the principal.[j] Payment to a third person by appointment of the principal, will be substantially payment to the principal.[k] Payment to the agent who made the contract with the payee (without prohibition) is payment to the principal.[l] But payment may be made to the principal after an authority given to an agent to receive.[m] Payment to a broker or factor who sells for a principal not named is good.[n] Payment to an agent when he is known to be such will be good if made upon the terms authorized,[o] if there be no notice not to pay him;[p] and even after notice, if the factor had a lien on the money when paid.[q] If the broker sell goods as his own, payment is good though the mode varies from that agreed on.[r]

Payment to an attorney is as effectual as payment to the principal himself.[s] The attorney of record may give a receipt and discharge the judgment[t] if made within one year.[u] Not so of an agent appointed by the attorney to collect the debt.[v] Payment by an officer to an attorney whose power had been revoked before he received the execution did not discharge the officer.[w] Payment to one of two copartners discharges the debt,[x] even after dissolution.[y] So payment to one of two joint creditors is good, though they are not partners.[z] But payment by a banker to one of several joint depositors, without the assent of the others, was held a void payment.[a]

Payment to the wife of the creditor is not a discharge of the debt unless she is expressly or impliedly his agent.[b] An auctioneer employed to sell real estate has no authority to receive the purchase money by virtue of that appointment merely.[c] Usually the terms of the sale authorize him to receive the purchase money.[d] Payment was made to a person sitting in the creditor's counting-room, and apparently doing his business, and it was held good,[e] but payment to an apprentice so situated was held not to be good.[f] Generally, payment to the agent must be made in money to bind the principal.[g] Power to receive money does not authorize an agent to commute[h] nor submit to arbitration.[i]

An agent authorized to receive money cannot bind his principal by receiving goods,[j] or a note:[k] but a subsequent ratification would remedy any such departure from authority; and it is said that slight acts of acquiescence will be deemed ratification. Payment to one of several joint creditors of his part, will not alter the nature of the debt so as to enable the others to sue separately.[l] Payment to one of several executors is sufficient.[m] Payment to a trustee generally concludes the cestui que trust in law.[n]

PERSONS. See various sub-heads, ante and post.

A PERSON is a man, woman, or child, considered as opposed to things, or distinct from them. A human being. A natural being. A man considered according to the position (private or official) which he holds in law, with all the rights to which the place he holds entitles him, and the duties which it imposes.[a] A corporation which is an artificial person.[b] The term "person," as is seen, is more extensive than man—including artificial beings, as corporations, as well as natural beings. But when the word "persons" is spoken of in legislative acts, natural persons will be intended, unless something appear in the context to show that it applies to artificial persons.[c] Natural persons are divided into males, or men, and females, or women. Men are capable of all kinds of engagements and functions, while women are restricted by the law, both civil and political. Persons are also divided into citizens and aliens, when viewed with regard to their political rights. When they are considered in relation to their civil rights, they are living or civilly dead. Persons are again divided into legitimate and illegitimate, when considered as to their rights by birth. When viewed in their domestic relations they are divided into parents and children; husbands and wives; guardians and wards; and masters and servants.

PERSONAL PROPERTY. See REAL PROPERTY.

PERSONAL PROPERTY is the right or interest which a man has in things personal. The right or interest less than a freehold which a man has in realty, or any right or interest which he has in things movable. Every tangible thing which is the subject of ownership not forming a part or parcel of real property. Personal property is to be distinguished from things personal. There may be, for example, a personal estate in realty, as chattels real; but the only property which a man can have in things personal must be a personal property. The essential idea of personal property is that of property in a thing movable or separable from the realty, or of perishability or possibility of brief duration of interest as compared with the owner's life in a thing real, without any action on the part of the real owner.[d]

A crop growing in the ground is personal property so far as not to be considered an interest in land under the statute of frauds.[e] It is a general principle in this country, that stock held in corporations is to be considered as personal property.[f] Title to personal property is acquired: 1. By original acquisition by occupancy; as, by capture in war, by finding a lost thing. 2. By original acquisition, by accession. 3. By original acquisition, by intellectual labor; as, copyrights and patents for inventions. 4. By transfer, which is by act of law, by forfeiture, by judgment, by insolvency, by intestacy. 5. By transfer by act of the party, by gift, by sale.[g]

PLEADINGS. See COPYRIGHTS; PATENTS, ETC.

PLEADINGS are the written statements of the parties, to an action, suit, or other judicial proceeding, by which the matter in controversy is brought to an issue, i. e., a single point, affirmed on one side and denied on the other. The written statements of the plaintiff's cause of action, and of the defendant's ground of defence.

IN CIVIL PRACTICE, pleadings are statements in a logical and legal form of the facts which constitute the plaintiff's cause of action, or the defendant's ground of defence; it is the formal mode of alleging that on the record (this is in writing, whereby it is made a part of the record by filing, entering, or recording by the proper officer of the court) which constitutes the support or the defence of the party in evidence.[h] The object of pleading is to secure a clear and distinct statement of the claims of each party, so that the controverted points may be exactly known, examined, and decided, and the appropriate remedy or punishment administered.[i] Good pleading consists in good matter pleaded in good form, in apt time, and due order.[j] Good matter includes all facts and circumstances necessary to constitute the cause of complaint, or ground of defence, and no more. It does not include argument or matters of law. But some matters of fact need not be stated, though it be necessary to establish them as facts. Such are, among others:

1. Facts of which the courts take notice by virtue of their being courts: as, the time of accession of the head or ruler of the government;[k] time and place of convening the legislature or of

2. Facts which the law presumes: as, the innocence of a party; illegality of an act, etc.[p]

3. Matters which the other party should plead, as being more within his knowledge.[q]

4. Mere matters of evidence of facts.[r]

5. Unnecessary matter: as, a second breach of condition, where one is sufficient;[s] or intent to defraud, where the facts alleged constitute fraud.[t]

6. Irrelevant matter.[u] Such matter may be rejected without injury to the pleading, if wholly foreign to the cause, or repugnant;[v] but in many cases matter must be proved as stated, if stated.[w]

7. The matter stated must be true and susceptible of proof; but legal fictions when allowable may be stated as facts.[x]

The pleadings should be according to the established forms.[y] This rule is, however, one merely of caution, as many radical changes have been made in the various States in the law of pleading. Still, reference to and some regard for old forms will be found quite profitable. In general, facts should be stated logically, in their natural order, with certainty, clearly and distinctly. So that, the party who is to answer, the court and jury, who is to try the cause, may readily understand what is meant[z] with precision,[a] and with brevity.[b] The facts stated must not be insensible or repugnant,[c] nor ambiguous or doubtful in meaning,[d] nor argumentative,[e] nor by way of recital;[f] and should be stated according to their legal effect and operation.[g] As to the time of pleading, see GENERAL STATUTES.

The order of pleading different matters is of importance as affecting the defendant, who may oppose the plaintiff's suit in various ways. The order is as follows:

1. To the jurisdiction of the court.

2. To the disability, etc., of the person; 1. Of the plaintiff; 2. Of the defendant.

3. To the plaintiff's complaint, correct declaration, or petition (in other words to the plaintiff's cause of action as it appears in his first pleading).

4. To the writ (or summons, etc.) 1. To the form of the writ, first matter, apparent on the face of it. Second matter not appearing on the writ. 2. To the action of the writ.

5. To the action itself in bar.

This is the natural order of pleading, because each subsequent plea admits that there is no foundation for the former.[h] An exception exists where matter is pleaded which has arisen or come to the plaintiff's knowledge since the last continuance, or since the last stage of the suit, and where the subject-matter is one over which the court has no jurisdiction, a failure to plead such new matter cannot confer jurisdiction.[i]

Whatever may be the names given, rules made by courts, or methods prescribed by the legislature, or pursued by the parties, court, or jury, the end of pleading is still the same, namely, the production of one or more points in issue, where a single fact is affirmed by one party and denied by the other.[j] See GENERAL STATUTES, title CIVIL PRACTICE.

IN CRIMINAL PRACTICE the rules of pleading are the same as in civil practice; there is, however, less liberty of amendment of indictments and informations.

The order of the defendant's pleading is as follows:

1. To the jurisdiction.

2. In abatement.

3. Special pleas in bar, as, former acquittal, former conviction, pardon, etc.

4. The general issue. See GENERAL STATUTES, title CRIMINAL PRACTICE.

IN EQUITY PRACTICE pleadings consist in formal written allegations or statements of the respective parties on the record to maintain the suit, or to defeat it, of which, when contested in matters of facts they propose to offer proofs, and in matters of law to offer arguments to the court.[k] The substantial object of pleading is the same, but the forms and rules of pleading are very different in law and in equity. PRACTICE is the form, manner, and order in which legal or equitable proceedings are instituted, conducted, and concluded in the various courts, whether civil, criminal, or equitable, according to the rules prescribed by the law and in such courts. It includes jurisdiction, limitation, parties, and pleading. A settled, uniform, and long-continued practice, without objection, is evidence of what the law is; and such practice is based on principles which are founded in justice and convenience.[k]

REAL PROPERTY. See BONDS, ETC.; CONVEYANCES, ETC.; PERSONAL PROPERTY.

REAL PROPERTY includes land and whatever is erected or growing thereon, and whatever is above or beneath the surface thereof,[a] including houses standing and trees growing upon the land but not chattels like stock upon a farm, or furniture in a house. Houses and even growing trees may acquire the character of personal property; and various chattels, originally movable, may acquire the character of real property. Thus a dwelling-house erected upon the land of another with his assent, is the personal property of the builder.[b] So, if a nurseryman plant trees for the purpose of growing them for market, upon land hired by him, they would be personal property.[c] So, crops while growing, planted by the owner of the land, are a part of such real property; but if sold by him when fit for harvesting they become personal,[d] and a sale of such crops, though not fit for harvest, as personal, is good.[e] So, trees growing, though not in a nursery, may be changed into the category of personal property, if sold to be cut without any right to have them stand to occupy the land.[f] But if the owner of land in fee sold the trees growing thereon to another and his heirs, to be cut at his pleasure, the property in the trees would be real.[g] The same rule would apply to property in fee in a dwelling-house, though the owner only has the right to have it stand upon the land of another. And one may own a chamber in a house as his separate real estate.[h] So, a large class of articles originally wholly movable, and which may be at the time even disconnected with the land, may be regarded as real property, from having been fitted or actually applied to use in connection with real estate, such as keys in locks fastened upon doors; mill-stones and irons, though taken out of the mill for repairing; window-blinds, though temporarily removed from the house; and fragments of a dwelling-house destroyed by a tempest;[i] and a conveyance of a "saw-mill" with the land, passed iron bars and chains then in it, which had been fitted for and used in operating it.[j] See various subjects, below.

ABANDONED LAND. See DERELICT, ETC., below.

ADVERSE ENJOYMENT (or possession or exercise of an easement or privilege under a claim of right against the owner of the land out of which the easement is derived)[k] if open[l] and continued uninterruptedly[m] for the term of twenty years, raises a conclusive presumption of a grant, provided that there was, during the time, some one in existence, in possession, and occupation, who was not under disability to resist the use.[n]

ADVERSE POSSESSION, or the enjoyment of land or such estate as may be conveyed, etc., under such circumstances as to indicate that such enjoyment has been commenced and continued under an assertion or color of right on the part of the possessor.[o] When actual[p] and has been adverse for twenty years, of which a jury are to judge from the circumstances, the law raises the presumption of a grant.[q] But this presumption arises only when the use or occupation would otherwise have been unlawful.[r]

Possession is not adverse: 1. When both parties claim under the same title.[s] 2. When the possession of the one party is consistent with the title of the other.[t] 3. When, in contemplation of law, the claimant has never been out of possession.[u] 4. When the occupier has acknowledged the claimants' titles.[v]

AIR is not a subject of property; it belongs equally to all men, being indispensable to their existence. But no man has a right to use the air over another man's land in such a manner as to be injurious to him. And to poison or materially change the air, to the annoyance of the public, is a nuisance.[v] An easement of light and air coming over the land of another cannot be acquired by prescription in the United States,[w] though the rule is otherwise in England.[x]

ALLUVION is that gradual and imperceptible increase of the earth on a shore or bank of a river, by the force of water, as the current or waves (alluvion differs from avulsion in this, the latter is sudden and perceptible). Such increase is so gradual that no one can judge how much is added at each moment of time.[y] The proprietor of the bank, increased by the alluvion, is entitled to the addition, this being regarded as the equivalent for the loss he may sustain for the breaking in or encroachment of the waters upon his land.[z] The increase is to be divided among riparian proprietors by the following rule: Measure the whole extent of their ancient line on the river, and ascertain how many feet each proprietor owned on this line; divide the newly-formed river line in equal parts, and appropriate to each proprietor as many of these parts as he owned feet on the old line, and then draw lines from the points at which the proprietors respectively bounded on the old to the points thus determined as the points of division on the newly-formed shore. In applying this rule allowance must be made for the projections and indentations on the old line.[a] When the increase is instantaneous, it belongs to the State, upon the ground that it was a part of the bed of the river of which it is proprietor.[b] Sea-weed which is thrown upon the beach, partaking of the nature of alluvion, belongs to the owner of the beach.[c] But sea-weed below low-water mark, on the bed of a navigable river, belongs to the public.[d]

APPURTENANCES. See CONVEYANCES.

AREAS are enclosed yards or openings in houses; also, open places adjoining to the house.[e]

AVULSION, or the tearing away or removal of a considerable quantity of soil from the land of one man, and its deposit upon or annexation to the land of another, suddenly and by the perceptible action of the water,[f] does not deprive the first owner of the property thus torn away or removed.[g]

BENCHES. See WASTE, below.

BETTERMENTS are improvements of a higher character than mere repairs,[h] and also denote additional value which the property acquires from some public improvement, as laying out, widening, etc., streets, etc.

BOUNDARIES are those separations, natural or artificial, which mark the confines or line of two contiguous estates,[i] and those objects placed or existing at the angles of the boundary lines Boundaries are frequently denoted by monuments fixed at the angles; in such case the connecting lines are always presumed to be straight, unless described to be otherwise.[j]

Artificial boundaries are those erected by man; the ownership in case of such boundaries must of course turn mainly upon circumstances peculiar to each case,[k] generally extending to the centre.[l] A tree standing directly on the line is the joint property of both proprietors;[m] otherwise, where it only stands so near that the roots penetrate.[n] Land bounded on a highway extends to the centre, though a private street,[o] unless the description excludes the highway.[p] See COURSES; LINES and CORNERS; MONUMENTS; below.

Natural boundaries are natural objects remaining where they were placed by nature. A river or stream is a natural boundary, and the centre of the stream is the line.[q]

The order of marshalling boundaries is as follows:

1. The highest regard is had to natural boundaries.

2. To lines actually run and corners marked at the time of the grant.

3. If the lines and courses of an adjoining tract are called for, the lines will be extended, if they are sufficiently established, and no other departure from the deed is required, preference being given to marked lines.

4. To courses and distances.[r]

Parol evidence is often admissible to identify and ascertain the locality of monuments called for by a description;[s] and where the description is ambiguous the parties may be shown.[t] Common reputation may be admitted to identify monuments, especially if of a public or questionable nature.[u]

BRICK EARTH. See WASTE, below.

BUILDINGS. Every edifice erected or fixed upon or over the soil, whether composed of stone, brick, marble, wood, or other proper substance connected together and designed for use in the position in which it is erected or fixed, is an accessory to the soil, and is therefor real estate and belongs to the owner of the soil.[v] See LAND; WASTE, below.

CAVEAT EMPTOR. ("Let the purchaser take heed," that is, let the person buying see that the title be good.)[w] In every sale of real property a purchaser's right to relief at law or in equity on account of defects or incumbrances in or upon the property sold, depends solely upon the covenants for title which he has received,[x] unless there be a fraud on the part of the vendor.[y]

CLAY. See WASTE, below.

COAL. See WASTE, below.

COASTS, or margins of a country bounded by the sea, include the natural appendages of the territory which rise out of the water, although they are not of sufficient firmness to be inhabited or fortified. Shoals perpetually covered with water are not, however, comprehended under the name of coast. The small islands situate at the mouth of the Mississippi, composed of earth and trees drifted down by the river, which are not of sufficient consistency to support the purposes of life, and uninhabited, though resorted to for shooting birds, are a part of the coast.[z]

CORPORATIONS. In case of corporations, the same property may assume character of both real and personal. Thus, if a corporation hold real estate, such as a mill or banking house, it would be in the hands of the corporation real estate, but as constituting a part of the property owned and represented in the form of stock by the members constituting the body of the corporation it is personal estate.[a] But the shares in corporate property may be real estate when declared to be so by the charter creating it, or when the corporation is merely constituted to hold and manage lands.[b]

COURSES are directions of a line with reference to a meridian. Where there are no monuments, the land must be bounded by the courses and distances mentioned in the patent or deed.[c] When the lines are actually marked, they must be adhered to, though they vary from the course mentioned in the deed.[d] See BOUNDARIES, above.

CREEKS are lesser streams than rivers.[e] A creek passing through a deep, level marsh, and navigable by small craft, may, under legislative authority, be obstructed by a dam, or wholly filled up and converted into house lots, such obstructions not being in conflict with any act of Congress regulating commerce.[f]

CURTESY is the estate to which a man is entitled by common law, on the death of his wife, in the lands or tenements of which she was seized in possession in fee simple or otherwise during their coverture, provided they have had lawful issue born alive which might have been capable of inheriting the estate. It is the freehold estate for the term of his natural life.[g] See title CONVEYANCES, ante.

CURTILAGE is the enclosed space immediately surrounding a dwelling-house, contained within some enclosure.[x]

DEEDS. See title CONVEYANCES, ante.

DERELICT LAND is that which is abandoned or diverted by its former owner. Also land left uncovered by the receding of water from its former bed.[h] When left so by degrees the derelict land belongs to the owner of the soil adjoining; but when the sea retires suddenly it belongs to the government.[i]

DEVISE. See CONVEYANCES, "Wills."

DETAINER is the withholding of possession of real property from its owner. This may be either lawful and peaceable, or unlawful and forcible. The detainer is lawful where the entry has been lawful, and the estate is held by virtue of some right. It is unlawful and forcible where the entry has been unlawful and with force, and it is retained by force against right; or even where the entry has been peaceable and lawful, if the detainer be by force and against right: as, if a tenant at will should detain with force after the will has determined, he will be guilty of a forcible detainer.[j]

A forcible entry or detainer consists of the unlawful or forcible taking or keeping possession of lands or tenements by means of threats, force, or arms, and without authority of law.[k] If a party enter peaceably, and then turn out the possessor by force, or frighten him out of the possession by threats, it is a forcible entry.[l] As to forcible detainer, the same violence or terror which will make an entry forcible will also make a detainer forcible.[m] A forcible entry and a forcible detainer are separate and distinct causes of action and offences.[n] Force, either actually applied or justly to be feared from the conduct of the defendant, is essential .

to support the action or prosecution.[o] Generally, the person having the right of possession to land entered upon by another, or kept from him unlawfully by a tenant holding over, may enter and take possession, using as much force as may be necessary for that purpose: provided, that in so doing he commits no act amounting to a breach of the peace, or leading directly thereto.[p] See ESTATES AT SUFFERANCE, below.

DOORS. See WASTE, below.

DOVEHOUSE. See WASTE, below.

DRAINAGE through another man's land can only be had under legislative authority, or where the right is granted or exists by prescription,[q] or by consent of the owner.

DRIPPING water from one house upon another can only be allowed where the owner has acquired the right by grant or prescription; and no one has a right to construct his house so as to let the water drip over his neighbor's land.[r]

EASEMENTS are rights in the owner of one parcel of land, by reason of such ownership, to use the land of another for a special purpose not inconsistent with the general property of such owner.[s] Easements are as various as the exigencies of domestic convenience or the purposes to which buildings or lands may be applied.

The following easements or rights attach to land as incidents or appurtenances, viz.:

1. Pasture in other land.
2. Fishing in other waters.
3. Taking game on other land.
4. Taking wood, minerals, or other produce of the soil, from other land.
5. Receiving air, light, or heat from or over other land.
6. Receiving or discharging water over, or having support to buildings from, other land.
7. Going on other land to clear a mill-stream, or repair its banks.
8. To draw water from a spring there, or do some other act not involving ownership.
9. Carrying on an offensive trade.[t]
10. Burying in a church or a particular vault.[u]

Some of these are affirmative or positive; that is, authorizing the commission of acts on the lands of another actually injurious to it; as, a right of way; or negative, being only consequently injurious; as, forbidding the owner from building to the obstruction of light to the dormant (or existing) tenement.[v]

All easements must originate in a grant of the property, or an agreement, express or implied, of the owner of the servient (or subordinate) tenement. The evidence of their existence, by the common law, may be by proof of the agreement itself, or by prescription requiring actual and uninterrupted enjoyment immemorially, or for upwards of twenty years, to the extent of the easement claimed, from which a grant is implied. A negative easement does not admit of possession; use therefore is not essential to its existence.[w]

Easements are extinguished: 1. By release. 2. By merger, when the two tenements or parcles of land are united under the same title and to the same person. 3. By necessity, as by a license to the servient owner to do some act inconsistent with its existence. 4. By cessation of enjoyment, when acquired by prescription, the non-user being evidence of a release, when the abandonment has continued at least as long as the user from which the right arose. In some cases a shorter time will suffice.[x]

EMINENT DOMAIN is a power to take private property for public use,[y] which exists only in cases where public convenience or necessity demands its exercise.[z] This right may be exercised upon both corporeal property, as land, or incorporeal, as franchises.[a]

Eminent domain is distinguished from public domain, which is property owned absolutely by the State in the same manner as an individual holds his property.[b]

ENTRY. See DETAINER, above.

EQUITY OF REDEMPTION is a right which a mortgagee of property, or other person having an interest in it, has of redeeming it after it has been forfeited at law by the non-payment of the money secured when due, with interest and costs. Any person who is interested in the mortgaged property, or any part of it, or who has a legal estate therein, or a legal or equitable lien thereon, provided he comes in as privy (a partaker, person interested, etc.) in estate with the mortgagor, may exercise the right. These include heirs, devisees, executors, administrators, and assignees of the mortgagor;[c] subsequent incumbrancers;[d] judgment creditors;[e] tenants for years;[f] a janitress;[g] dowress and tenant by curtesy;[h] one having an easement.[i]

ESCROW. See CONVEYANCES, ante.

ESTATES may be limited in duration to the life of one's self—to the life of another, or others.[j]

ESTATES ON CONDITION. See CONVEYANCES; CONDITIONS.

—— IN COPARCENARY are those which several persons hold as one heir, whether male or female. Such estates have three unities, time, title, and possession; but the interests of the coparceners may be unequal.[j]

—— BY THE CURTESY are those to which a husband is entitled upon the death of his wife, in the lands or tenements of which she was seized and possessed in fee simple or fee tail during their coverture, provided they have lawful issue born alive, and possibly capable of inheriting her estate.[k]

—— IN DOWER are those which a widow has for her life in some portion of the lands and tenements of which her husband was seized at any time during coverture, and which her issue might have inherited if she had any, and which is to take effect in possession from the death of her husband.[l]

—— IN EXPECTANCY are those giving a present or vested contingent right of future enjoyment; one in which the right to taking or receiving the profits is postponed to some future period.[x]

——, FEE SIMPLE. See CONVEYANCES, ante.

——, FEE TAIL. See CONVEYANCES, ante.

—— OF INHERITANCE are those which may descend to heirs.[z] Such are all freehold estates, except estates for life.[m]

—— OF JOINT TENANCY are those where several persons have any subject of property jointly between them in equal shares by purchase.[n] The right of survivorship is the distinguishing characteristic of these estates.[o]

—— FOR LIFE are freehold estates, not of inheritance, but which are held by the tenant for his own life, or the life or lives of one or more other persons, or for an indefinite period, which may endure for the life or lives of persons in being, and not beyond the period of a life.[p]

—— IN POSSESSION are those where the tenant is actually taking or receiving the rents and other advantages arising therefrom.[q]

—— IN REMAINDER are those limited to take effect in possession or in enjoyment, or in both, subject only to any term of years or contingent interest that may intervene immediately after the regular expiration of a particular estate of freehold, previously created together with it, by the same instrument, out of the same subject of property.[r]

—— IN REVERSION are residues of estates left in the grantor, to commence in possession after the determination of some particular estate granted out by him.[s] The residue of an estate which always continues in him who made a particular grant.[t] —— IN SEVERALTY are those held by single persons in their own right only, without any other person being joined or connected with them in point of interest during their estate.[u]

—— AT SUFFERANCE are interests of tenants who have come rightfully into possession of lands by permission of the owner, and continue to occupy the same after the period for which he is entitled to hold by such permission.[v] This estate is uncommon, but is recognized as an estate so far, that the landlord must enter before he can bring ejectment against the tenant.[w] If the tenant has personally left the house, the landlord may break the doors.[x] And generally, the landlord may use force to regain possession, subject only to indictment if any injury is committed against the public peace.[y] See DETAINER, above.

—— AT WILL are those by which the tenant has made entry under a lease to hold during the joint wills of the parties to the same.[z] Such estates are rare, being generally construed into estates for years, or from year to year by the decisions of the courts, or by statute.[a]

—— FOR YEARS are interests in lands by virtue of a contract for the possession of them for a definite and limited period of time[b] to suit the contracting parties. The length of time for which the estate is to endure is of no importance in ascertaining its character, unless otherwise declared by statute.[c]

EVICTION is total where a possessor is wholly deprived of his rights in the premises. It is partial where the possessor is deprived of only a portion of them, as if a third person comes in and ejects him from the possession of half his land, or establishes a right to some easement over it by a title prior to that under which he holds. With respect to the premises leased, an eviction consists in taking from a tenant some part of the premises of which he was in possession, not in refusing to put him in possession of something which by the agreement with his landlord he should have enjoyed,[d] and in order to effect a suspension of rent there must be something equivalent to an expulsion from the premises, and not a mere trespass or disturbance in the enjoyment of them.[e] It is not necessary, however, in order to produce the eviction of a tenant, that there should be actual physical expulsion, for a landlord may do many acts tending to diminish the enjoyment of the premises, short of an expulsion, which will amount to an eviction in law; as, if he erects a nuisance so near the leased premises as to deprive the tenant of the use of them, or if he otherwise intentionally disturbs the tenant's enjoyment to such an extent as to injure his business or destroy the comfort of himself and family, it will amount to an eviction.[f]

FENCES are, in general, regulated by local laws. Generally, fences or boundaries are to be built on the line; the expense, when made according to law, is borne equally between the parties. A partition fence is presumed to be the common property of both owners of the land.[g] When built upon the land of one of them it is his; but if it were built equally upon the land of both, at their joint expense, each would be the owner in severalty of the part standing on his own land.[h] See WASTE, below.

FIXTURES are personal chattels affixed to real estate, which may be severed and removed by the party who has affixed them, or by his personal representative, against the will of the owner of the freehold. Questions frequently arise as to whether given appendages to a house or land are to be considered part of the real estate, or whether they are to be treated as personal property. The latter are movable, the former are not. The annexation may be actual or constructive. 1. By actual annexation is understood every mode by which a chattel can be joined or united to the freehold. The article must not be merely laid upon the ground; it must be fastened, fixed, or set into the land, or into some such erection as is unquestionably a part of the realty; otherwise it is in no sense a fixture.[i] Locks, iron stoves set in brick work, posts, and window blinds, afford examples of actual annexation.[j] Some things, however, have been held to be parcel of the realty which are not annexed or fastened to it; for example, deeds or chattels which relate to the title of the inheritance, and go to the heir.[k] But loose, movable machinery, used in prosecuting any business, to which the freehold is adapted, cannot be considered part of the real estate, nor in any way appurtenant to it;[l] so deer in a park, fish in a pond, and doves in a dove-house, go to the heir, and not to the executor, being, like keys and heirlooms, constructively annexed to the inheritance.[m]

The general rule is, that fixtures once annexed to the freehold become a part of the realty. But to this rule there are exceptions; as, 1. Where there is a manifest intention to use the fixture in some employment distinct from that of the occupant of the real estate;[n] 2. Where it has been annexed merely for the purpose of carrying on a trade;[n] for the fact that it was put up for such a purpose indicates an intention that the thing should not become a part of the freehold.[o] But if there is a clear intention that the thing should be permanently annexed to the realty, its being used for purposes of trade would not, perhaps, bring the case within one of the exceptions.[p]

Where the question arises between an executor and the heir-at-law, the rule is strict that whatever belongs to the estate to which the fixture appertains will go to the heir; but if the ancestor manifested an intention (which may be inferred from circumstances) that the things affixed should be considered personalty, they will be so treated, and will go to the executor.[q]

As between a vendor and vendee the same strictness applies as between an executor and an heir-at-law; for all fixtures which belong to the premises at the time of the sale, or which have been erected by the vendor, whether for purposes of trade or manufacture, or not, as potash kettles for manufacturing ashes, and the like, pass to the vendee of the land, unless they have been expressly reserved by the terms of the contract.[r]

The same rule applies as between mortgagor and mortgagee.

As between devisee and executor, things permanently annexed to the realty at the time of the testator's death pass to the devisee—his right to fixtures being similar to that of a vendee.[s]

As between a landlord and his tenant the strictness of the ancient rule has been much relaxed. The rule is understood to be that a tenant, whether for life, for years, or at will, may sever at any time before the expiration of his tenancy, and carry away all such fixtures of a chattel nature as he has himself erected upon the demised premises for the purposes of ornament, domestic convenience, or to carry on trade, provided, always, that the removal can be effected without material injury to the freehold.[t]

A tenant for years may remove fixtures at any time before he gives up the possession of the premises, although it may be after his term has expired, and he is holding over;[v] but tenants for life, or at will, having uncertain interests in the land, have, after the determination of their estates, not occasioned by their own fault, a reasonable time within which to remove their fixtures.[w]

If a tenant quits possession of land without removing such fixtures as he is entitled to, the property in them immediately vests in the landlord; and though they are subsequently severed, the tenant's right to them does not revive. If, therefore, a tenant desires to have any such things upon the premises after the expiration of his term, for the purpose of valuing them to an incoming tenant, or the like, he should take care to get the landlord's consent, otherwise he will lose his property in them entirely.[x] The rights of parties with respect to particular articles are sometimes regulated by local customs, especially as between outgoing and incoming tenants; and in cases of this kind it becomes a proper criterion by which to determine the character of the article, and whether it is a fixture or not. GROUND-RENT is a rent paid for the privilege of building on another man's land. HEIRLOOMS include charters, deeds, and other evidences of the title of land, together with the box or chest in which they are. contained, the keys of a house, and the fish in a fish pond.[a]

HOUSES, if divided into several apartments having no communication with each other, are considered as so many distinct and separate houses.[b] In a conveyance or lease of a house, the enclosed space immediately surrounding it and contained within some enclosure, and the garden, will pass, even without the words "with the appurtenances" being added.[c] In a conveyance or lease of a house with the appurtenances, no more will pass, although other lands have been occupied with the house.[d] See WASTE, below.

IMPROVEMENTS, as between the rightful owner and an occupant who in good faith has put them on, belong to the rightful owner of the land, without compensation for the increased value. This is the common law,[e] though the rule is otherwise in equity,[f] and by the statutes of some States.

INCUMBRANCES are any rights, or interests in land, which may be held by third persons, which diminishes the value of, but not the right to pass such land.[g] Of these are public highways;[h] a private right of way;[i] a claim of dower,[j] though inchoate only;[k] an outstanding mortgage,[l] other than one which the covenantee is bound to pay;[m] a liability to tax laws.[n] But does not include a condition on which an estate is held.[o] The vendor of real estate is bound to disclose incumbrances, and to deliver to the purchaser the instruments by which they were created or on which the defects arise; and the neglect of this is to be considered fraud.[p] The interest on incumbrances is to be kept down by the tenant for life,[q] to the extent of rents accruing;[r] and for any sum paid beyond that he becomes a creditor of the estate.[s] When the whole incumbrance is removed by a single payment, the share of the tenant for life is the present worth of the annuity, for the life of the tenant, equal to the annual amount of the interest which he would be obliged to pay.[t] This rule applies to estates held in dower;[u] in curtesy;[v] in tail only in special cases.[w]

INNINGS or lands may be gained from the sea by drainage.[x]

IRRIGATION. The owner of land over which there is a current stream is, as such, the proprietor of the current.[y] A riparian proprietor may avail himself of the river for irrigation, provided such river be not materially lessened, and the water absorbed be imperceptible or trifling.[z] See SPRINGS, below.

ISLANDS when they first arise in the open sea belong to the first occupant; but when they are newly formed so near the shore as to be within the boundary of some State, they belong to that State. Islands which arise in rivers, when in the middle of the stream, belong in equal parts to the riparian owners. When they arise merely on one side, they belong to the riparian owner up to the middle of the stream.[a] See COASTS, above; WATER, below.

JOINTURE. See ESTATES, ante.

KEYS of a house are considered real estate, and descend to the heir with the inheritance.[b]

LAND includes any ground, soil, earth, mineral, or liquids, and all natural and artificial growth. It may be wild, cultivated, arable, or otherwise. It includes in general all buildings erected upon it,[c] with some exceptions; if a stranger voluntarily erects buildings on another's land, they will belong to the owner of the land, and will become a part of it,[d] though under peculiar circumstances they would be considered as personal property.[e] It includes mines, except mines of gold and silver; and a grant of public lands will include these also.[f]

LEASE. See title CONVEYANCES, ante.

LICENSE may be by conveyance duly acknowledged,[g] by parol,[h] or by implication from circumstances, as opening a door in response to a knock.[i] It is distinguished from an easement, which implies an interest in the land to be affected, and is also distinguished from a lease, which is a right to take the profits of land. It may be and often is coupled with a conveyance of some interest in the land itself, or right to take the profits.[j] It may be granted by the owner, or, in many cases, by a servant.[k] An executory license may be revoked at the pleasure of the grantor.[l] In general, a mere license may be revoked at the grantor's pleasure,[m] although the licensee has incurred expense.[n] Not so a license closely coupled with a transfer of title to personal property.[o] An executed license, which destroys an easement enjoyed by the licenser in the licensee's land, cannot be revoked.[p] The effect of an executed license, though revoked, is to relieve or excuse the licensee from liability for acts done properly in the pursuance thereof, and their consequences.[q] The licensee's improvements on lands are without compensation, in equity.[r]

LIENS. See that title, ante.

LIME. See WASTE, below.

LINES. When a line is mentioned in a deed as ending at a particular monument it is to be extended in the direction called for without regard to distance until it reach the boundary,[s] and a marked line is to be adhered to although it depart from the course.[t] Where a number of persons settle simultaneously, or at short intervals, the same neighborhood, and their tracts, if extended in certain directions, would overlap each other, the settlers sometimes by agreement determine upon dividing lines, which are called consentible lines. These lines, when fairly agreed upon, have been sanctioned by the courts; and such agreements are conclusive upon all persons claiming under the parties to them, with notice, but not upon bona fide purchasers for a valuable consideration without notice, actual or constructive.[u] Lines fixed by compact between nations are binding on their citizens and subjects.[v]

LINES AND CORNERS in conveyances and surveys are the boundary lines and their angles with each other.[w]

METALS. See WASTE, below.

MILLS conveyed with their appurtenances, even without the land, carries the whole right of water enjoyed by the grantor, as necessary to its use, and as a necessary incident;[x] and a devise of a mill carries the land used with it and the right to use the water.[y] A mill includes not only the building in which the business is carried on, but includes the site, the dam, and other things annexed to the freehold necessary for its beneficial enjoyment.[z] As to manufacturing machinery, see FIXTURES, above, and title LANDLORD AND TENANT, "Crops," "Emblements," "Fixtures," etc. See WASTE, below.

MINES of gold and silver and the precious metals belong to state or sovereign,[a] but pass by a grant of land, without exception or reservation, from the state or government.[b] Mines of other minerals belong to the owner of the soil, and pass by a conveyance thereof, unless separated;[c] but the owner may convey his mines by a separate and distinct conveyance so as to create one freehold in the soil and another in the mines.[d] In case of a separate ownership the owner of the mine must support the MONUMENTS or permanent landmarks, established or erected to indicate and mark boundaries of lands, may be either natural or artificial objects: as, rivers, known streams, springs, or marked trees,[k] and even posts set up at the corners,[l] and in a clearing.[m] When monuments are established they must govern, although neither courses, nor distances, nor computed contents correspond.[n] See BOUNDARIES, above.

PEWS in churches are sometimes real and sometimes personal estate, depending, generally, upon local statutes; though, in the absence of statute law, it would seem they were interests in real estate and partake of its character.[p]

POSSESSED applies to the right and enjoyment of a person having a term who is said to be possessed, but not seized.[q]

POSSIBILITIES are merely contingent interests in real or personal property.[r] It is uncertain whether the contingency may happen or not; whether the interest will be realized or not.

PRESCRIPTION is a mode of acquiring title to incorporeal hereditaments,[s] by immemorial or long continued enjoyment. The length of time necessary to raise a strict prescription was limited to sixty years.[t] Grants of incorporeal hereditaments are presumed upon proof of enjoyment of the requisite character for a period of years equal to that fixed by statute as the period of limitation of real actions.[u] Prescription properly applies only to incorporeal hereditaments,[v] such as easements of water, light and air, way, etc.[w] A class of franchises.[x]

QUARRIES. When a farm is let with an open quarry the tenant may, when not restrained by his contract, take out the stone; but he has no right to open new quarries. See MINES, above.

RELICTION is an increase of land by the retreat or recession of a sea, lake, or river. Lands left dry by the sudden or sensible recession of the sea, or of a river which flows and reflows with the tide, belong to the sovereign or State, unless the property in the land so relected has been granted to individuals; in other words, the right of property in the soil is not changed by the change of the water. But where the recession is gradual and insensible, or where it takes place in fresh water rivers, the soil of which belongs to riparian proprietors, the lands so relicted belong to the proprietors of the estates which are thereby increased.[y] But this reliction must be from the sea in its usual state, for if it should inundate the land and then recede, this would be no reliction.[z] If a navigable lake recede gradually and insensibly, the derelict land belongs to the adjacent riparian proprietors; but if the recession be sudden and sensible, such land belongs to the State.[a] See AVULSION; ALLUVION, above.

REMAINDERS are remnants of estates in real property expectant on a particular estate created together with it at the same and one time. A contingent remainder depends on a contingency which may or may not happen; a vested remainder is one by which the present interest passes to the property, though to be enjoyed in future.[b]

REPAIRS. What a party is bound to do, when the law imposes upon him the duty to make necessary repairs, does not appear to be very accurately defined. Natural and unavoidable decay in the buildings must always be allowed for, when there is no express covenant to the contrary; and, it seems, the lessee will satisfy the obligation the law imposes on him by delivering the premises at the expiration of his tenancy in a habitable state. Questions in relation to repairs most frequently arise between the landlord and tenant. When there is no express agreement between the parties, the tenant is always required to do the necessary repairs.[c] He is, therefore, bound to put in windows or doors that have been broken by him, so as to prevent any decay of the premises; but he is not required to put a new roof on an old, worn-out house.[d] An express covenant on the part of the lessee to keep a house in repair, and leave it in as good a plight as it was when the lease was made, does not bind him to repair the ordinary and natural decay.[e] As to the time when the repairs are to be made, it would seem reasonable that when the lessor is bound to make them, he should have the right to enter and make them, when a delay until after the expiration of the lease would be injurious to the estate; but when no such damage exists, the landlord should have no right to enter without the consent of the tenant.[f] When a house has been destroyed by accidental fire, neither the tenant nor the landlord is bound to rebuild, unless obliged by some agreement so to do.[g]

REVERSION is the residue of an estate left in the grantor to commence after the determination of some particular estate granted out by him; the return of the land to the grantor and his heirs after the grant or lease is over.[h]

SEASHORE is that space of land on the border of the sea between high and low water-mark.[i] At common law the seashore belongs to the State or sovereign.[j] The rights of fishery and navigation remain unimpaired by the grant of lands covered by navigable water.[k] The power of the States is absolute, except so far as it is controlled by the federal constitution,[l] and they may regulate the use of their shores and the fisheries thereon, provided such regulations do not interfere with the acts of Congress.[m] The public right of fishing includes shrimping and gathering all shell-fish, or other fish, whose natural habitat is between high and low water-mark.[n]

SEA-WEED when cast upon the land belongs to the owner of the land adjoining the seashore, upon the ground that it increases gradually, it being useful as a manure or in protection of the ground, and being some compensation for the encroachment of the sea upon the land.[o]

SEEDS which have been sown in the earth immediately become a part of the land in which they have been sown.[p]

SEIZIN is the possession of real property with an intent on the part of the occupant to claim a freehold interest.[q]

SHORE includes only such land on the side of a sea, lake, or river, where the water ebbs and flows, as lies between high and low-water mark.

SPRINGS are the exclusive property of the owner of the soil. When another has an easement or right to draw water from such a spring, acquired by grant or prescription, and the spring fails, the easement ceases; but if it returns the right revives. The owner of land on which there is a natural spring has a right to use it for domestic and culinary purposes, and for watering his cattle; and he may make an aqueduct to another part of his land, and use all the water required to keep the aqueduct in order, or to keep the water pure.[r] He may also use it for irrigation, provided the volume be not materially decreased.[s] The owner of the spring cannot lawfully turn the current, or give it a new direction; he is bound to let it enter the inferior estate on the same level it has been accustomed to, and at the same place, for every man is entitled to a stream of water flowing through his land without diminution or alteration.[t] The owner of the superior inheritance, or land on which there is a spring, has no right to deprive the owner of the estate below him;[u] nor can he detain the water unreasonably.[v] freehold; but as soon as they are cut down they are personal property. Trees belong to the owner of the land where they grow; but if the roots go out of one man's land into that of another, or the branches spread over the adjoining estates, such roots or branches may be cut off by the owner of the land into which they thus grew.[x] When the roots grow into the adjoining land, the owner of such land may lawfully claim a right to hold the tree in common with the owner of the land where it was planted; but if the branches only overshadow the adjoining land, and the roots do not enter it, the tree wholly belongs to the owner of the estate where the roots grow.[y] When the tree grows directly on the boundary-line, so that the line passes through it, it is the property of both owners, whether it be marked as a boundary or not.[z] See WASTE, below.

VEST. An estate is vested in possession when there exists a right of present enjoyment; and an estate is vested in interest when there is a present fixed right of future enjoyment.[a]

VESTED REMAINDERS are estates by which the present interest passes to the party, though to be enjoyed in the future, and by which the estate is invariably fixed to remain to a determinate person, after a particular estate is extinguished.[b]

VIEW. Every one is entitled to a view from his premises; but he thereby acquires no right over the property of his neighbors. The erection of buildings which obstruct a man's view, therefore, is not unlawful, and such buildings cannot be considered a nuisance.[c]

WAINSCOT. See WASTE, below.

WARREN. See WASTE, below.

WASTE is any spoil or destruction done, or permitted, to lands, houses, or other real property to the prejudice of the owner or his heirs. It may be voluntary or permissive.

Permissive waste to buildings consists in omitting to keep them in tenantable repair; suffering the timbers to become rotten by neglecting to cover the house; or suffering the walls to fall into decay for want of plastering; or the foundation to be injured by neglecting to turn off a stream of water, and the like. At common law, the mere suffering of a house to remain unroofed, if it was so at the commencement of the lease, would not be waste; but a tenant assumed the responsibility of any other part of the house thereby becoming ruinous or decayed; and so although no injury or destruction of a house by lightning, tempest, or the public enemy, would not be waste, yet to suffer it to remain ruined would be.[d] Permissive waste in houses, as a general rule, is now only punishable when a tenant is bound to repair, either expressly or by implication.[e]

Voluntary waste is committed upon cultivated fields, orchards, gardens, meadows, and the like, whenever a tenant uses them contrary to the usual course of husbandry, or in such a manner as to exhaust the soil by negligent or improper tillage.[f] It is, therefore, waste to convert arable land into woodland, or the contrary.[g] Cutting down fruit trees, although planted by the tenant himself, is waste.[h] So if an outgoing tenant plough up strawberry beds which he has bought of a former tenant when he entered.[i] When lands are leased on which there are open mines of metal, or coal, or pits of gravel, lime, clay, brick earth, and the like, the tenant may dig out of such mines or pits, but he cannot open any new mines or pits without being guilty of waste; any carrying away of the soil is also waste.[k] Voluntary waste is committed in houses by pulling them down, or by removing wainscots, floors, benches, furnaces, windows, doors, shelves, and other things once fixed to the freehold, although they have been erected by the lessee himself, unless they were mere fixtures; and this kind of waste may take place not only in pulling down houses, or parts of them, but also in changing their forms, as if a tenant pull down a house and erect a new one in its place, whether it be larger or smaller than the first,[l] or convert a parlor into a stable, or a grist-mill into a fuelling-mill,[m] or turn two rooms into one.[n] The building of a house where there was none before, by the strict rules of the common law, was said to be waste;[o] and taking it down after it was built was waste also.[p] Voluntary waste may be committed upon timber; and in those countries where timber is scarce and valuable, the law is strict in this respect. The law of waste accommodates itself to the varying wants and conditions of different countries; that will not, for instance, be waste in an entire woodland country which would be so in a cleared one. The extent to which wood and timber on such land may be cut without waste, is a question of fact for a jury to determine under the direction of the court.[q] A tenant may always cut trees for the repair of houses, fences, hedges, stiles, gates, and the like;[r] and for making and repairing all instruments of husbandry; as plows, carts, harrows, rakes, forks, etc.;[s] and he may, when unrestrained by the terms of the lease, cut timber for firewood, if there be not enough dead timber for such purposes;[t] but where, under such circumstances, he is entitled to cut down timber, he is restrained, nevertheless, from cutting ornamental trees, or those planted for shelter;[u] or to exclude objects from sight.[v] A tenant of a dove-house, warren, park, fish-pond, or the like, would also be guilty of waste, if he took away animals therefrom to such an extent as not to leave as large a stock of them as he found when he came in.[w] Windfalls are the property of the landlord; for whatever is severed by inevitable events, as, by a tempest, or by a trespasser, and by wrong, belongs to him who has the inheritance.[x]

In general, a tenant is answerable for waste although it is committed by a stranger, for he is the custodian of the property, and must take his remedy over.[y] But he is not liable when the damage is caused by lightning, tempest, or a public enemy.[z] He is also liable at common law for all damages done by fire, accidental or otherwise, upon the premises, unless this be excepted in the lease, though accidental fires will not, through statutory enactment throughout the States, render him liable. The protection afforded by these statutes extends only to a case of accidental fire—that is, to one which cannot be traced to any particular or wilful cause—and stands opposed to the negligence of either servants or masters; and therefore an action still lies against a person upon whose premises a fire commences through the negligence of himself or his servants, and is productive of injury to his neighbor.[a]

The redress for injuries of the foregoing character are either preventive or corrective, which may forfeit the tenant's further occupancy of the premises, as well as subject him to exemplary damages for all injury done.

WATER. A pool of water, or a stream or water-course, is considered as part of the land; hence a pool of twenty acres would pass by the grant of twenty acres of land without mentioning the water.[b] A mere grant of water passes only a fishery;[c] but the owner of land over which water flows may grant the land, reserving the use of all the water to himself, or may grant the use of all or a portion of the water, reserving the fee of the land to himself.[d]

Water-courses in a legal sense are comprehended under the general name of land; so that a grant of land conveys to the grantee not only fields, meadows, and the like, but also all the rivers and streams which naturally pass over the surface of the land.[e] Those who own land bounding upon a water-course are generally known as riparian proprietors.[f] By the rules of the common law all proprietors of lands have precisely the same rights to waters flowing through their domains, and one can never be permitted so to use the stream as to injure or annoy those situated on the course of it, either above or below him. They have no property in the water itself, but a simple right to use it; accordingly while each successive riparian proprietor is entitled to the reasonable use of the water for the supply of his natural wants, and for the operation of mills and machinery, he has no right to flow the water back upon the proprietor above;[g] nor to discharge it so as to flood the proprietor below;[h] nor to divert the water,[i] even for the purpose of irrigation, unless it be returned without essential diminution;[j] nor to obstruct or detain it, except for some reasonable purpose, such as to obtain a head of water for a mill, and to be again discharged, so as to allow all on the same stream a fair participation;[k] nor to corrupt the quality of the water by unwholesome or discoloring impurities.[l] But while such are the rights of the riparian proprietors when unaffected by contract, these rights are subject to endless modifications on the part of those entitled by their enjoyment, either by grant,[m] or by reservation,[n] or by a license,[o] or by agreement,[p] or by twenty years adverse enjoyment, from which a grant or contract will be implied,[q] in such a way as to adapt the uses of the water to the complex and multiplying demands and improvements of civilization.

Wherever a water-course divides two estates each estate extends to the thread or central line of the stream; but the riparian owner of neither can lawfully carry off any part of the water without the consent of the other opposite, each riparian proprietor being entitled not to half or any other proportion of the water, but to the whole bulk of the stream undivided and indivisible.[r] Where an island is on one side of a river, so as to give the riparian owner of that side only one-fourth of the water, he has no right to place obstructions at the head of the island to cause one-half of the stream to descend on his side of the river, but the owner opposite is entitled to the natural flow of the remaining three-fourths.[s]

Where there is an underground flow of water so well defined as to be a constant stream, the owner of the land through which it flows has no right to divert it to the injury of the person on whose land it comes to the surface as a spring.[p]

WHARFS, the several States being owners of the soil of tide waters within their respective territories, may by law authorize and regulate the erection of wharfs thereon, until the general government shall have legislated upon the subject.[q] In the navigable fresh-water rivers the riparian proprietors, being the owners of the bed of the stream, may wharf out to the channel, subject only to the condition that they do not materially interrupt the navigation.

RECEIPTS. See BAILMENTS; CONTRACTS; CONVEYANCES; RELEASES.

A RECEIPT is a written acknowledgment of payment of money or delivery of chattels.

AN ACQUITTANCE is a discharge or release from a debt. The writing which is evidence of the discharge. A receipt in full, which bars a further demand. An agreement in writing to discharge a party from an engagement to pay a sum of money. It differs from a release in this, that the latter is under seal, while an acquittance is not.[r] But though not under seal it has nearly the same effect as a release.[s]

A receipt is often useful as evidence of facts collateral to those stated in it. It proves the payment, and whatever inference may be legally drawn from the fact of the payment described, will be supported by the receipt. Thus, receipts for rent for a given time have been held prima facie evidence of the payment of all rent previously accrued.[t] And they have been admitted on trial of a writ of right, as showing acts of ownership on the part of him who gave them.[u] A receipt given by A. to B. for the price of a horse, afterwards levied on as the property of A., but claimed by B., was once admitted as evidence of ownership against the attaching creditor.[v] A receipt "in full of all accounts," the amount being less than that called for by the accounts of the party giving it, was held in his favor evidence of a mutual settlement of accounts on both sides, and a payment of the balance ascertained to be due after setting off one account against the other.[w] A receipt given by an attorney for securities he was to collect and account for has been held presumptive evidence of the genuineness and justness of the securities.[x] And when a general receipt is given by an attorney for an evidence of debt then due, it will be presumed he received it in his capacity as attorney for collection; and it is incumbent on him to show he received it for some other purpose if he would avoid an action for neglect in not collecting.[y]

A receipt is executed by the person to whom the delivery or payment is made, and may be used as evidence against him on the general principle which allows the admission or declaration of a party to be given in evidence against himself. As an instrument of evidence, the receipt of one person is, in general, inoperative against another, although often useful as a voucher in the private settlement of accounts. And receipts of public officers are sometimes admissible per se.[z] It is essential to a receipt that it acknowledge the payment or delivery referred to.[a] Also, the receipt must, from the nature of the case, be in writing, and must be delivered to the debtor; for a memorandum of payment made by the creditor in his own books is no receipt.[b]

The mere acknowledgment of payment made is not treated in law as binding or conclusive in any high degree. So far as a simple acknowledgment of payment on delivery is concerned, it is presumptive evidence only,[c] and is, in general, open to explanation,[d] being an exception to the general rule that parol evidence cannot be admitted to contradict or vary a written instrument.[e] Thus, a party may always show, in explanation of a receipt limited to such acknowledgment, the actual circumstances under which it was made,[f] e. g., that it was obtained by fraud,[g] or given under a mistake,[h] or that, in point of fact, no money was actually paid as stated in it.[i]

IN CONTRACTS, ETC.

A receipt may embody a contract, and, in this case, it is not open to the explanation or contradiction permitted in the case of a simple receipt.[j] The fact that it embodies an agreement, brings it within the rule that all matters resting in parol are merged in the writing.[k] Thus, a receipt which contains a clause amounting to an agreement as to the application to be made of the money paid—as when it is advanced on account of future transactions—is not open to parol evidence inconsistent with it.[l] A bill of parcels with prices affixed, rendered by a seller of goods to a purchaser, with a receipt of payment executed at the foot, was held in one case to amount to a contract of sale of the goods, and therefore, not open to parol explanation, while, in another case, a similar bill was held merely a receipt, the bill at the head being deemed only a memorandum to show to what the receipt applied.[m] A bill of lading which usually contains words of receipt stating the character, quantity, and condition of the goods as delivered to the carrier, is the subject of a somewhat peculiar rule. It is held that so far as the receipt is concerned, it may be explained by parol.[n] But as respects the agreement to carry and deliver, the bill is a contract, to be construed like all other contracts, according to the legal import of its terms, and cannot be varied by parol.[o]

Where the payment is made in some particular currency or medium, as doubtful bank-bills, a promissory note of another person, etc., clauses are often inserted in receipts specifying the condition in which such mode of payment is accepted. The general rule is that negotiable paper given in payment is presumed to have been accepted on the condition that it shall not work a discharge of the demand unless the paper shall ultimately produce satisfaction; and if an intent to accept it absolutely does not affirmatively appear, the creditor is entitled, in case the paper turned out to him is dishonored, to return it and claim to be paid anew.[p] If the receipt is silent on that subject, it is open to explanation, and the creditor may rebut it by proof that the payment admitted was in fact made by a note, bill, check, bank-notes, afterwards ascertained to be counterfeit, or notes of a bank in fact insolvent, though not known to be so to the parties, etc.[q] But if the agreement of the parties is specified in the receipt, the clause which contains it will bind the parties, as being in the nature of a contract.[r] A receipt for a note taken in payment of an account will not, in general, constitute a defence to an action on the account, unless it appears by proof that the creditor agreed to receive the note as payment, and take the risk of its being paid.[s]

IN DEEDS.

The effect to be given to a receipt for the consideration-money, so frequently inserted in a deed of real property, has been the subject of numerous and conflicting adjudications. The general principle settled by weight of authority is, that for the purpose of sustaining the conveyance as against the vendor and his privies, the receipt is conclusive; they are estopped to deny that a consideration was paid sufficient to sustain the conveyance.[t] But in a subsequent action for the purchase money, or upon any collateral demand, e. g., in an action to recover a debt which was in fact paid by the conveyance, or in an action for damages for breach of covenant in the deed, and the like, the grantor may show that the consideration was not, in fact, paid—that an additional consideration to that mentioned was agreed for, etc.[u] And when the deed is attacked for fraud, or is impeached by creditors as voluntary, and therefore void, or when the object is to show the conveyance illegal, the receipt may be explained or contradicted.[v]

IN FULL, ETC.

When a receipt acknowledges payment "in full" of a specified debt, or "in full of all accounts" or of "all demands" the instrument is of much higher and more conclusive character. It does not, indeed, like a release, operate upon the demand itself, extinguishing it by any force or virtue in the receipt, but it is evidence of a compromise and mutual settlement of the rights of the parties. The law infers from such acknowledgment an adjustment of the amount due after consideration of the claims of each party, and the payment of the specified sum as a final satisfaction.[w] This compromise, thus shown by the receipt, will often operate to extinguish a demand, although the creditor may be able to show he did not receive all that he justly ought.[x] If the rights of a party are doubtful, are honestly contested, and time is given to allow him to satisfy himself, a receipt in full, though given for less than his just rights, will not be set aside. Thus, in general, a receipt in full is conclusive when given with a knowledge of the circumstances, and when the party giving it cannot complain of any misapprehension as to the compromise he was making, or of any fraud.[y] But receipts of this character are not wholly exempt from explanation: fraud or misrepresentation may be proved, and so may such mistake as enters into and vitiates the compromise of the demand admitted.[z] The evidence in explanation must be clear and full, and addressed to the point that there was not in fact an intended and valid compromise of the demand. For if the compromise was not binding, the receipt in full will not aid it. The receipt only operates as evidence of a compromise which extinguished the claim.[a]

LARCENY AND FORGERY OF.

A receipt may be the subject of larceny[b] or of forgery,[c] and it is a sufficient "uttering" of a forged receipt to place it in the hands of a person for inspection, with intent fraudulently to induce him to make an advance on the faith that the payment mentioned in the spurious receipt has been made.[d]

A RELEASE is the giving up or abandoning a claim or right to the person against whom the claim exists, or the right is to be exercised or enforced. An express release is one directly made in terms by deed or other suitable means. An implied release is one which arises from acts of the creditor or owner, without any express agreement.[f]

A release by operation of law is one, which though not expressly made, the law presumes in consequence of some act of the releasor; for instance, when one of several joint obligors is expressly released, all others are also released by operation of law,[g] unless otherwise provided by statute.

Releases may either give up, discharge, or abandon a right of action, or convey a man's interest or right to another who has possession of it or some estate in the same.[h] In the former class, a mere right is surrendered; in the other, not only a right is given up, but an interest in the estate is conveyed and becomes vested in the releasee.

In general, the words of a release will be restrained by the particular occasion of giving it.[i]

In releasing an interest in real estate the words generally used in the conveyance are: "Remised, released, and forever quit-claimed."[j] See CONVEYANCES; QUIT-CLAIM DEEDS; ante.

SALES. See ASSIGNMENT; CONTRACTS; CONVEYANCES; PERSONAL PROPERTY; REAL PROPERTY; ETC.

A SALE is an agreement by which one of two contracting parties, called the seller, gives a thing and passes the title to it, in exchange for a certain price in current money, to the other party, who is called the buyer or purchaser, who, on his part, agrees to pay such price.[a] This contract differs from a barter or exchange in this: That in the latter, the price or consideration, instead of being paid in money, is paid in goods or merchandise susceptible of a valuation.[b] It differs from accord and satisfaction, because in that contract the thing is given for the purpose of quieting a claim, and not for a price. An onerous gift, when the burden it imposes is the payment of a sum of money, is, when accepted, in the nature of a sale. When partition is made between two or more joint owners of a chattel, it would seem the contract is in the nature of a barter.[c] An absolute sale is one made and completed without any condition whatever. A conditional sale is one which depends for its validity upon the fulfilment of some condition.[d] A forced sale is one made without the consent of the owner of the property, by some officer appointed by law, as by a marshal, constable, or sheriff, in obedience to a mandate of a competent tribunal. This sale has the effect to transfer all the rights the owner had in the property, but it does not, like a voluntary sale of personal property, guarantee a title to the thing sold; it merely transfers the rights of the person as whose property it has been seized. This kind of sale is sometimes called a judicial sale. A voluntary sale is one made freely, without constraint by the owner of the thing sold. This is the common case of sales, and to this class the general rules of the law of sales apply. A private sale is one made voluntarily, and not by auction. A public sale is one made at auction to the highest bidder. Auction sales are sometimes voluntary, as, when the owner chooses to sell his goods in this way, and then as between the seller and buyer the usual rules relating to sales apply; or they are involuntary or forced when the same rules do not apply.

A sale of a chattel is an exchange thereof for money.[e] And proof of an exchange will not support an averment of a sale of goods.[f] For a sale to be valid in law, there must be parties, a consideration, and a thing to be sold. All persons may be parties to a sale, unless they labor under the disabilities and restraints already mentioned. Consideration also has been considered. The existence of the thing to be sold, or the subject-matter of the contract, is essential to the validity of the contract.[g] If a horse be dead before the sale, or merchandise be destroyed by fire, both parties being ignorant thereof, the sale is wholly void. If a substantial part of the thing sold be non-existent, the buyer has his option to rescind the sale, or take the remainder with a reasonable abatement of the price.[h] A mere contingent possibility, not coupled with an interest, is no subject of sale; as, all the wool one shall ever have.[i] But a valid sale may be made of the wine that a vineyard is expected to produce; or the grain that a field is expected to grow; or the milk that a cow may yield during the coming year; or the future young born of a female animal then owned by the vendor;[j] or the wool that shall hereafter grow upon his sheep. If rights are vested, or possibilities are distinctly connected with interest or property, they may be sold.[k] A sale may be good in part, and void as to the residue; good as between the parties, but void as to creditors; good as to some of the creditors, but void as to others.[l]

There is a presumption that every sale is to be consummated at once; that the chattel is to be delivered, and the price paid without delay. If, therefore, nothing appears but an offer and an acceptance, and the vendee goes his way without making payment, it is a breach of the contract, and the vendor is not bound by the sale. But if there was a delivery of the chattel, or the receipt of earnest, or of part payment, either of these is evidence of an understanding that something should remain to be performed in futuro; and the legal presumption is rebutted. So, where the terms of the contract expressly postpone delivery, or payment, or both, to a future day, here also the sale is valid. No one can give a good title who has no good title. If a mere finder, and still more if a thief, sells what he has found or stolen to A., and A. buys in good faith, and so sells to B., and B. to C., and C. to D., etc., the original owner may reclaim his property wherever it may be, and take it without any payment to the holder, any more than if that holder were the thief himself.[m] If the owner has been deceived and defrauded into parting with his property, so that he could claim it from the taker, yet if he voluntarily parted with the property, he cannot reclaim it from one who in good faith buys it from the fraudulent party; not even if the fraud amounted to a felony.[n] No one can be made to buy of another without his own assent. Thus, if A. sends an order to B. for goods, and C. sends the goods, he cannot sue for the price, if A. repudiates the sale, although C. had bought B.'s business.[o]

CAVEAT EMPTOR.

In sales of personal property, the purchaser buys at his own risk, unless the seller gives an express warranty, or unless the law implies a warranty from the circumstances of the case, or the nature of the thing sold, or unless the seller be guilty of fraudulent misrepresentation, or concealment in respect to a material inducement to the sale.[p]

CONDITIONAL SALES.

In General. In every sale, unless otherwise expressed, there is an implied condition that the price shall be paid before the buyer has a right to possession; this is a condition precedent. "If I sell my horse for money, I may keep him until I am paid."[q] But, although the vendee may not have the right of possession in the article bought until the price is paid, yet the right of property passes by the bargain; and if the property is lost while yet in the possession of the vendor, without his fault, the loss will fall on the purchaser.[r] But in an action for non-delivery the buyer need only aver that he was ready and willing to receive and pay for them, and that the seller refused to deliver them, without averring an actual tender.[s] Generally, wherever in a contract for sale it is stated that some precise act is to be done by either party, this may amount to a condition, though not so expressed As where in a contract for a sale of goods, the words were, "to be delivered on or before" a certain day, this is a condition precedent, and if they were not delivered on or before that day,[t] (and the delivery must have been made at a reasonable time on that day, or the vendee is not bound),[u] the purchaser is not bound to take the goods. So, if the goods are to be delivered on "request," the buyer must allege and prove a request, this being a condition precedent to his acquiring a complete right.[v] But if the seller has incapacitated himself from delivering, by reselling or otherwise, no request is necessary.[w]

In sales called "contracts of sale or return," the property in the goods passes to the purchaser, subject to an option in him to return them in a fixed time, or a reasonable time; and if he fail to exercise this option in so returning them, the sale becomes absolute, and the price of the goods may be recovered in an action for goods sold and delivered.[x] And what is a reasonable time within which a contract is to be performed, or an act to be done, is, in the absence of any contract between the parties, a question of law for the court, to be determined by a view of all the circumstances of the particular case.[y]

In sales at auction there are generally conditions of sale; and where these are distinctly made known to the buyer, they are of course binding on him, and the auctioneer or the owner of the goods is bound on his part.[z]

Any misstatement, made fraudulently, and capable of having any effect on the sale, will avoid it. Nor will the conditions of sale be binding against a purchaser, if so framed as to give the seller advantages which the buyer could not readily apprehend or understand without legal knowledge or advice; for the buyer is discharged from a purchase made under "catching conditions."[a]

MORTGAGE OF PERSONAL PROPERTY.[b]

DELIVERY. While, as between the parties, the property passes by a sale without delivery, it is not valid, in general, as against a third party without notice, without delivery. For if the same thing be sold by the vendor to two parties, by conveyances equally valid, he who first gets possession will hold it.[c] In general where there is a completed sale, and no change of possession, this retention of possession by the vendor is a badge of fraud, and will avoid the sale in favor of a party who subsequently acquires title to the property in good faith, and without knowledge of the sale.[d] The delivery may be symbolical, or a part for the whole;[e] and a delivery of the key, the property being locked up, is so far a delivery of the goods that it will support an action of trespass against a subsequent purchaser, who gets possession of them.[f] Marking timber on a wharf, or goods in a warehouse, operates as a delivery; goods bought at a shop, weighed or measured, and separated, and left by the owner until called for, are sufficiently delivered. So selecting and marking sheep, then in possession of one who was requested by the vendee to retain possession of them for him, is a sufficient delivery.[g] But if goods are sent, even under a contract of sale, to be applied by the receiver to a particular purpose, to which purpose they were not and could not be applied, the sender does not lose his property in them by delivery, but may recover them back.[h] And if property be awarded to one by arbitrators, at a certain price, the tender of the price does not pass the property, unless the other party accept the price.[i]

If no time be appointed for delivery, or for payment, the acts must be done within a reasonable time; and if neither party does any thing within that period, the contract is deemed dissolved.[j] If the goods are to be delivered when requested, the purchaser may sue without proving a request, provided the seller has incapacitated himself from delivering them, as by a resale or the like,[k] but, in general, a request must be made before the seller can be sued for non-delivery.[l] And if the vendee, either by the express terms of the contract or from its nature, is to designate the manner or place of delivery, he must do this before he can maintain his action.[m] If a day be fixed either for delivery or payment, the seller has the whole of it; and if any one of several days, the seller has the whole of all of them. If on a certain day, at a certain place, then it must be done at a convenient time before sunset, because the presence of the other party is necessary, and the law does not require him to be there through the whole twenty-four hours.[n] The seller is to keep the thing sold until the time of delivery, with ordinary care, and is liable for the want of that care, or of good faith; but if he does so keep it, he is not liable for its loss,[o] unless it perish through a defect against which he has warranted. If the parties are distant from each other, the seller must follow the directions of the buyer as to the way of sending the thing sold to him, and then a loss in the transportation will fall on the buyer,[p] unless attributable to the negligence of the seller; if the seller disregards such orders, the loss in transportation falls on him, though it does not happen through his neglect. If the directions are general, as "by a carrier," without naming any one, usual and proper precautions must be taken, and will protect the seller. The vendor, in delivering goods to a carrier, must exercise due care and diligence, so as to provide the consignee with a remedy over against the carrier.[q] And it is a part of his duty to give such notice of the sending them by ship or otherwise as will enable the buyer to insure or take other precautions.[r] If the contract be to deliver the thing ordered at the residence or place of business of the buyer, the seller is liable, although such delivery becomes impossible, unless it becomes so through the act of the buyer.[s] If the seller refuse to deliver it at the time and place agreed on, and it perish afterwards without his fault, he is liable for it. But if he be ready, and the vendor wrongfully refuse or neglect to receive it, the seller is not liable, unless the thing perishes through his gross and wanton negligence. And if the vendee unreasonably neglect or refuse to comply with conditions precedent to delivery, or to receive the goods on delivery, the seller may, after due delay and proper precautions, resell them, and hold the buyer responsible for any deficit in the price.[t] It is common and generally advisable to sell them at auction; but this is not necessary.[u] If the seller sell on cred the goods are to be delivered without payment; but if the buyer becomes insolvent before the time of delivery, the seller may demand security, and refuse to deliver the goods without it.[v] If no place of delivery be specially expressed in the contract, the store, shop, farm or warehouse where the article is sold, made, grown, or deposited, is in general the place of delivery.[w] If, however, a particular place be appointed by the contract, the goods must be delivered there before an action will lie for their price.[x] If expressly deliverable to the vendee, but no place is named, it may be delivered to him where he is, or at his house, or place of business. Except so far as this option of the seller is controlled by the nature of the article. For if the purchaser brought a load of cotton to be worked in his mill, it cannot, under an agreement of delivery, be delivered at his distant dwelling-house, nor should a load of hay for his stable, or cooking-range for his kitchen, be delivered at his store on the wharf.

The vendee is bound to receive and pay for the thing sold at the time and place expressed or implied in the contract of sale, and to pay all reasonable charges for keeping it after sale and before delivery.[y] And if he refuse so to take and pay for the goods sold, he will be liable to an action for the price, or in a special action for damages, unless he can show incapacity to contract, or sufficient error, duress, or fraud.

EFFECT. Upon a completed sale the property in the thing sold passes to the purchaser.[z] If it be sold for cash and the price be not paid, or if it be sold on a credit, but by the terms of the bargain is to remain in the hands of the vendor, the vendor has a lien on it for the price;[a] and only payment or tendor gives the vendee a right to possession. And if it be sold on credit, and the buyer by the terms of the bargain has the right of immediate possession without payment, but the thing sold actually remains in the possession of the seller until the credit has expired, and the price is still unpaid, the seller then has a lien for the price.[b] If it be sold on credit, and there is no agreement in respect to the delivery or possession of the goods, the purchaser at once has a complete right not only of property but of possession,[c] subject only to defeasance under the law of stoppage in transitu. If the property passes, though not the right of possession, and the thing sold perish, the loss falls on the purchaser.[d] The vendor's lien is destroyed by a delivery of the goods, or by a delivery of a part, without an intention to separate it from the rest, but with an intention thereby to give possession of the whole. Mere delivery of a part will not, however, divest the vendor of his lien, as to the whole, if anything remains to be done by the vendor to the part undelivered.[e] If sold for cash, and the money be not paid within a reasonable time, the vendor may treat the sale as null.[f]

The property does not pass absolutely unless the sale be completed; and it is not completed until the happening of any event expressly provided for, or so long as anything remains to be done to the thing sold, to put it into a condition for sale, or to identify it, or discriminate it from other things.[g] Nor is the sale completed while anything remains to be done to determine its quantity, if the price depends on this; unless this is to be done by the buyer alone.[h] But where the thing to be done by the vendor is but trifling, or is but a mathematical computation, this rule will not apply.[i] If the parties intended that the sale should be complete before the article sold is weighed or measured, the property will pass before this is done.[j] And even if earnest, or a part of the price be paid, the sale is not complete under these circumstances, and if it finally fail, the money paid may be recovered back.[k]

PARTIES.

As a general rule, all persons sui juris, may be either buyers or sellers. There is a class of persons who are incapable of purchasing, except sub modo, as infants; and another class, who, in consequence of their peculiar relation with regard to the owner of the thing sold, are totally incapable of becoming purchasers, while that relation exists; these are trustees, guardians, assignees of insolvents, and generally all persons who, by their connection with the owner, or by being employed concerning his affairs, have acquired a knowledge of his property, as attorneys, conveyancers, and the like.

PRICE. The price to be paid must be certain, or so referred to a definite standard that it may be made certain;[l] as, what another man has given; or what another man shall say should be the price. But if this third party refuse o fix the price, the sale is void.[m] A sale may e made of an article for what it is worth, for hat can be ascertained by experts.[n] The thing old must be specific and capable of certain dentification. There must be an agreement of mind as to this; and if there be an honest error as to price, or as to the substantial and essential qualities of the thing sold, the sale may be treated as null.[o]

To constitute a sale there must be a price agreed upon; but upon the maxim id certum est quod reddi certum potest, a sale may be valid, although it is agreed that the price for the thing sold shall be determined by a third person.[p] The price must be an actual or serious price, with an intention on the part of the seller to require its payment. If, therefore, one should sell a thing to another, and by the same agreement he should release the buyer from the payment, this would not be a sale, but a gift, because in that case the buyer never agreed to pay any price, the same agreement by which the title to the thing is passed to him discharging him from all obligations to pay for it. As to the quantum of the price, that is altogether immaterial, unless there has been fraud in the transaction. The price must be certain or determined, but it is sufficiently certain, if, as before observed, it be left to the determination of a third person;[q] and an agreement to pay for goods what they are worth is sufficiently certain.[r]

The price must consist in a sum of money which the buyer agrees to pay to the seller; for, if paid in any other way, the contract would be an exchange or barter, and not a sale.

The consent of the contracting parties, which is of the essence of a sale, consists in the agreement of the will of the seller to sell a certain thing to the buyer for a certain price, and the will of the buyer to purchase the same thing for the same price. Care must be taken to distinguish between an agreement to enter into a future contract, and a present actual agreement to make a sale. The consent is certain when the parties expressly declare it. This in some cases it is requisite should be in writing.[s] This writing may be a letter.[t] When a party, by his acts, approves of what has been done, as knowingly using goods which have been left at his house by another, who intended to sell them, he will by that act confirm the sale.

In order to pass the property by a sale, there must be an express or implied agreement that the title shall pass. An agreement for the sale of goods is prima facie a bargain and sale of those goods; but this arises merely from the presumed intention of the parties, and if it appear that the parties have agreed, not that there shall be a mutual credit by which the property is to pass from the seller to the buyer, and the buyer is bound to pay the price to the seller, but that the exchange of the money for the goods shall be made on the spot, no property is transferred, for it is not the intention of the parties to transfer any.[u] But, on the contrary when the making of part payment, or naming a day for payment, clearly shows an intention in the parties that they should have some time to complete the sale by payment and delivery, and that they should in the meantime be trustees for each other, the one of the property in the chattel, and the other in the price.

As a general rule, when a bargain is made for the purchase of goods, and nothing is said about payment and delivery, the property passes immediately, so as to cast upon the purchaser all future risk, if nothing remains to be done to the goods, although he cannot take them away without paying the price.[v]

SUBJECT-MATTER OF SALE. There must be a thing which is the object of the sale; for if the thing sold at the time of the sale had ceased to exist, it is clear that there could be no sale; if, for example, you and I being in Philadelphia, I sell you my house or horse in Chicago, and at the time of the sale it be burned down or dead, it is manifest there was no sale, as there was not a thing to be sold.[w] It is evident, too, that no sale can be made of things not in commerce; as the air, the water of the sea, and the like. When there has been a mistake made as to the article sold, there is no sale; as, for example, where a broker who is the agent of both parties, sells an article, and delivers to the seller a sold note describing the article sold, as "St. Petersburg clean hemp," and bought note to the buyer as "Riza Rhine Hemp," there is no sale.[x]

There must be an agreement as to the specific goods which form the basis of the contract of sale; in other words, to make a perfect sale, the parties must have agreed, the one to part with the title to a specific article, and the other to acquire such title. An agreement to sell one hundred bushels of wheat, to be measured out of a heap, does not change the property until the wheat has been measured.[y]

TRANSITU, STOPPAGE IN.

WHAT THE RIGHT OF STOPPAGE IS, AND WHO HAS IT. Stoppage in transitu is the right which resides in the vendor of goods upon credit, to recall them, upon discovering the insolvency of the vendee, before the goods have reached him, or any third party has acquired bona fide rights in them.[z] This right exists, strictly speaking, only when the vendor has parted with the goods. If they have never left his possession, he has a lien on them for the full payment of their price; but not this right of stoppage.[a] The mere insolvency or bankruptcy of the vendee will not, per se, amount to a stoppage in transitu; for there must be some act on the part of the consignor indicative of his intention to repossess himself of the goods.[b] Notice of the consignor's claim and purpose given to the carrier before delivery is sufficient.[c] Notice should be given to the carrier, middleman, or other person having at the time the actual custody of the goods; or given to such a person that it may reach the carrier before delivery;[d] and it should be given to the carrier having possession, and not to the vendee himself without giving notice to the carrier.[e] This notice and demand on behalf of the consignor need not be made by any person specially authorized for that purpose; it may be made by a general agent of the consignor; or even by a stranger, if it be ratified by the vendor before the delivery to the vendee.[f] But a ratification of a notice and demand by an unauthorized person, not made until after delivery to the vendee, will not suffice.[g]

WHEN AND HOW THE RIGHT MAY BE EXERCISED. Generally, this right exists as long as the goods are in transitu. They are in transitu not only while in motion, and not only while in possession of the carrier (although he was appointed and specified by the consignee), but also while they are deposited in any place not actually or constructively the place of the consignee, or so in his possession or under his control, that the putting them there implies the intention of delivery. Thus, if goods are lodged in a public warehouse for non-payment of duties, they are not in the possession of the vendee, and the vendor may stop them.[h] They are in transit until they pass into the possession of the vendee. But this possession may be actual or constructive. Thus, suffering the goods to be marked and resold, and marked again by the second purchaser, is a constructive delivery.[i] So, a delivery by the vendor, to the vendee, of the key of the vendor's warehouse, where the goods were stored, amounts to a delivery.[j] So, demanding and marking the goods by the vendee's agent at the inn where the goods arrived at their destination.[k] So, if the vendor agreed to let the goods lie in his warehouse, for a short time, although free of rent, and to accommodate the vendee.[l] So, if rent be paid.[m] So, delivering to the vendee a bill of parcels with an order on the storekeeper for the delivery of the goods.[n] So, giving an order by the vendor to the keeper of a warehouse, for the delivery of the goods.[o] Delivery to a mercantile house, merely for transmission to the vendee, by a forwarding house, does not take away the right of stoppage.[p] If the carrier by reason of an arrangement with the consignee, or for any cause, remains in possession, but holds the goods only as the agent of the consignee, and subject to his order, this is the possession of the consignee.[q] Yet, even in cases where an existing usage authorizes the carrier to retain the goods in his hands as security for his whole claim against the consignee, the consignor may still stop them as in transitu, and take them from the carrier, by paying him the amount due specifically for the carriage of those goods.[r]

As the goods may pass constructively into the possession of the consignee, so they may be transferred by him before they reach him, in such a way as to destroy the consignor's right of stoppage in transitu. This may be done by an indorsement and delivery of the bill of lading. This instrument is now by the custom of merchants, which is adopted by the courts, and made a rule of law, regarded as negotiable; its indorsement and delivery operating as a symbolic delivery of the goods mentioned in it.[s] And such transfer, if it is in good faith and for a valuable consideration, passes the property to the second vendee, who holds it free from the right of the original vendor to stop the goods in transitu.[t] But a second vendee, to whom the bill of lading is not transferred, or not so transferred as to carry good title, and who neglects to take actual or constructive possession, is in no better position than the first vendee, under whom he claims; and the goods may be taken from him by the first vendor, on the insolvency of the first vendee.

WARRANTY IN SALES.

IN GENERAL. The warranties which accompany a sale of chattels are of two kinds in respect to their subject-matter: a warranty of TITLE and a warranty of QUALITY. And also of two kinds in respect to their form, as they may be express or implied.

The seller of a chattel, if in possession, warrants by implication that it is his own, and is answerable to the purchaser if it be taken from him by one who has a better title than the seller, whether the seller knew of the defect of his title or not, and whether he did or did not make a distinct affirmation of his title. But if the seller is out of possession, and no affirmation of title is made, then the purchaser buys at his peril. In any case where there was this warranty of title, a title subsequently acquired by the vendor would inure to the benefit of the vendee.[u] If the seller is in possession, but if the possession is of such a kind as not to denote or imply title in him, there will be no warranty of title. A general warranty does not cover defects plain and obvious to the purchaser, or of which he has had cognizance: thus, if a horse be warranted perfect, and want a tail or an ear.[v] This rule must not be misunderstood. A man may warrant against a defect which is patent and obvious as well as against any other. And a general warranty that a horse was sound would be broken, if one eye was so badly injured, or so malformed as to be entirely useless, although this defect might have been noticed at the time of sale.[w] And if a defect is obvious, yet if the purchaser be misled as to the character or extent, a warranty is implied.[x]

If there be no express warranty, the common law, in general, implies none. Its rule is, unquestionably, caveat emptor[y]—let the purchaser take care of his own interests. One important and universal exception is this: the rule never applies to cases of fraud, never proposes to protect a seller against his own fraud, nor to disarm a purchaser from a defence or remedy against a seller's fraud.[z] The common law does not oblige the seller to disclose all that he knows, which lessens the value of the property he would sell. He may be silent, leaving the purchaser to inquire and examine for himself, or to require a warranty. He may be silent, and be safe; but if he be more than silent, if by acts, and certainly if by words, he leads the buyer astray, inducing him to suppose that he buys with warranty, or otherwise preventing his examination or inquiry, this becomes a fraud, of which the law will take cognizance. The seller may let the buyer cheat himself ad libitum, but must not actively assist him in cheating himself.[a] As mere silence implies no warranty, neither do remarks which should be construed as simple praise or commendation;[b] but any distinct assertion or affirmation of quality made by the owner during a negotiation. It is essential that a warranty, to be binding, be made during the negotiation; if made after the sale is completed, it is without consideration and void.[c] If, however, the vendor, in a negotiation between the parties a few days before the sale, offer to warrant the article, the warranty will be binding[d] for the sale of a chattel, which it may be supposed was intended to cause the sale, and was operative in causing it, and will be regarded as implying or as constituting a warranty. If such affirmation were made in good faith it is still a warranty; and if made with a knowledge of its falsity, it is a warranty, and it is also a fraud. It is certain that the word warrant need not be used, nor any other of precisely the same meaning. It is enough if the words used import an undertaking on the part of the owner that the chattel is what it is represented to be, or an equivalent to such undertaking.[e] One exception to the rule of caveat emptor springs from the rule itself. For a requirement that the purchaser should "beware," or should take care to ascertain for himself the quality of the thing he buys, becomes utterly unreasonable under circumstances which make such care impossible. If, therefore, the seller alone possesses the requisite knowledge, or means of knowledge, and offers his goods for sale under circumstances which compel the purchaser to rely upon the judgment and honesty of the seller, without any examination on his own part as to the quality of the thing offered, the rule caveat emptor does not apply.[f]

If goods are sold by sample, there can be no examination of the goods, but there may be of the sample. There is, therefore, an implied warranty that the goods correspond to the sample.[g] If there be an express warranty, an examination of samples is no waiver of the warranty; nor is an inquiry or examination into the character or quality of the things sold; for a man has a right to protect himself by such inquiry, and also by a warranty.[g]

If a thing be ordered from a manufacturer for a special purpose, and it be supplied and sold for that purpose, there is an implied warranty that it is fit for that purpose.[h] If the thing is itself specifically selected and ordered, the purchaser takes upon himself the risk of its effecting its purpose. But where he orders a thing for a special purpose, or to do a specific work, there he puts this risk upon the person who is to supply the thing.[z]

No warranty can be implied from circumstances, if there be an express refusal to warrant.[i] And where the contract of sale is in writing, and contains no warranty, there parol evidence is not admissible to add a warranty.[j] And if there be a warranty in writing, it cannot be enlarged or varied by parol evidence.[k]

The rule as to unsoundness is, that if at the time of sale the animal has any disease which either actually does diminish the natural soundness of the animal, so as to make him less capable of work of any description, or which, in its ordinary progress, will diminish the usefulness of the animal; or if he has, either from disease or accident, undergone any alteration of structure that either actually does at the time, or in its ordinary effect will diminish his natural usefulness, such animal is unsound.[l] So, if a horse has at the time of sale the seeds of disease, which in its ordinary progress will diminish his natural usefulness, this is unsoundness.[m] But a temporary and curable injury, although it existed at the time of sale, if it does not injure the animal for present service, is not an unsoundness.[n] It seems to be immaterial whether the injury be permanant or temporary, curable or incurable, if it render the animal less fit for present usefulness and convenience.[o] The question of soundness or unsoundness is particularly for the jury; and the court will not set aside a verdict on account of a preponderance of the testimony the other way.[p]

Any property may be sold "with all faults." This is an emphatic exclusion of all warranty. But it gives the seller no right to commit a fraud, nor will it prevent the sale from being avoided on proof of fraud. And it is fraud if the seller conceal existing faults, and draws the attention of the buyer away so as to prevent his discovering them, or places the property in such circumstances that discovery is impossible, or made very difficult.[q]

In general, there is no implied warranty whatever arising from judicial sales.[r]

RIGHTS AND REMEDIES OF PARTY UPON BREACH OF WARRANTY. When warranty has been broken, the buyer may either bring his action at once, founding it upon the breach of warranty, without returning the goods; but his continued possession of the goods, and their actual value, will be considered in estimating the damages.[s] Or, he may return the goods forthwith; and if he does so without unreasonable delay, this will be a recission of the sale, and he may sue for the price if he has paid it, or defend against an action for the price, if one be brought by the seller. But if he has sold a part before his discovery of the breach, and therefore cannot return them, he may still rescind the sale, and will be liable for the market value of what he does not return.[t] And if the vendor refuse to receive the goods back, when tendered, the purchaser may sell them; and if he sells them for what they are reasonably worth, and within a reasonable time, he may recover of the vendor the loss upon the resale, with the expense of keeping the goods and selling them.[u]

TIME.

Generally in computing time one day is included and one excluded;[a] excluding the day on which an act is done, when the computation is to be made from such an act.[b] Including it,[c] except where the exclusion will prevent forfeiture.[d] Time from and after a given day excludes that day.[e]

In pleading, time is a point in or space of duration at or during which some fact is alleged to be committed.

In criminal actions both the day and year of the commission of the offence must appear; but there need not be an express averment if they can be collected from the whole statement.[f] The prosecutor may give evidence of an offence committed on any day which is previous to the making of the complaint or finding of the information or indictment;[g] but a day subsequent to the trial cannot be alleged.[h]

In personal actions all traversable affirmative facts should be laid as occurring on some day,[i] but no day need be alleged for the occurrence of negative matter.[j] A failure in this respect is, in general, aided after verdict.[k] Where the cause of action is a trespass of a permanent nature or constantly repealed, it should be laid as continuing. The day need not, in general, be the actual day of commission of the fact.[l] The exact time may become material and must then be correctly stated,[m] as, the time of execution of an executory written document.[n] The defence must follow the time laid in the plaintiff's complaint if the time is not material,[o] but need not when it beoomes material,[p] or in pleading matter of discharge,[q] or a record.[r]

Generally he who has precedency in time has the advantage in right; not that time, considered in itself, can make such a difference, but because the whole power over a thing being secured to one person, bars all others from obtaining a title to it afterwards.[s]

DATE. Written instruments generally take effect from the day of their date, but the actual date of their execution may be shown, though different from that which the instrument bears. But it is said that the date is not of the essence of a contract, but is essential to the identity of the writing by which it is to be proved.[t] And if the written date is an impossible one, the time of delivery must be shown.[u] In general it is sufficient to insert the day, month, and year; though in process from courts the hour is sometimes required in addition.

See CONTRACTS; CONVEYANCES, ETC.

A DAY is generally, but not always, regarded in law as a part of time; and fractions will not be recognized.[v] By custom the word day may be understood to include working days only,[w] and in a similar manner only a certain number of hours, then the number during which the work actually continued each day;[x] as a business day, those hours during which business is transacted, and this varies in different localities. Also, a banking day, extending from 9 or 10 A. M., to 3 or 4 P. M. A solar day is that portion of time during which the sun is shining or which the features of a man can be reasonably discerned.[y] Generally, in legal signification, a day includes the time elapsing from one midnight to the succeeding one.[z]

LAPSE OF TIME often furnishes a presumption, stronger or weaker, according to the length of time which has passed, of the truth of certain facts, such as the legal title to rights, payment of or release from debts.

MONTH. See BILLS, BONDS AND NOTES; TIME OF, ETC., p. 166.

NIGHT is that space of time during which the sun is below the horizon of the earth, except that short space which precedes its rising and follows its setting, during which, by its light, the countenance of a man may be discovered.[a]

SUNDAY. The time within which an act is to be done must be computed by excluding the first day and including the last; if the last day be Sunday it must be excluded. Where the year expires on Sunday, such Sunday is not

TORTS OR WRONGS. See CONTRACTS.

A TORT is a private or civil wrong or injury. A wrong independent of contract.[a] The commission or omission of an act by one without right whereby another receives some injury, directly or indirectly, in person, property, or reputation.

DISTINGUISHED FROM AGREEMENTS OR CONTRACTS. As recognized by the law for the enforcement of rights and redress of injuries, torts may be distinguished from contracts or agreements by these qualities: That parties jointly committing torts are severably liable wi- ut right of contribution from each other; t! he death of either party destroys the right of action; that persons under personal disabilities to contract are liable for their torts; that attachment, arrest, and imprisonment are allowed on claims arising under contracts.[b] A tort, however, may grow out of, or make part of, or be coincident with, a contract, as in the familiar case of a fraudulent sale, or fraudulent recommendation of a third person; the wrong of fraud almost necessarily implies an accompanying contract. In these cases the law often allows the party injured an election of remedies; that is, he may proceed against the other party either as a debtor or contractor, or as a wrong-doer.[c] Where personal property has been tortuously taken and turned into money or money's worth, the party injured may proceed upon the supposition of a contract implied by law in his favor. In such cases he is said to waive the tort.[d]

DISTINGUISHED FROM CRIMES. The same act may constitute a public wrong (crime), and a private wrong (tort), and, either at the same time or at different times, be the subject of a criminal prosecution and a private action for damages.[e]

In reference to the nature of the act, manual taking, interference, or removal is not necessary to constitute a tort. Any act of a party who has come rightfully into the possession of property in excess of or contrary to his authority over it, and which negatives or is inconsistent with the rights of the owner, constitutes a tort.[f]

ACTIONS FOR.

The liability to make reparation for an injury rests upon an original moral duty.[g] And an action on the case lies, in general, where one may sustain an injury by the misconduct or negligence of another for which the law has provided no other adequate remedy.[h] But to justify an action there must be a loss as well as a wrong.[i] But in a variety of cases, a wrong being proved, consequent damage will be presumed.[x]

In order to maintain an action the relation of cause and effect must be shown between the act and the injury,[j] and the damage must not be remote or indirect,[k] although every person who does a wrong is responsible for all the mischievous consequences that may reasonably be expected under ordinary circumstances from such misconduct.[l] In general, courts can enforce only local obligations and redress injuries to local rights.[m] Hence the legality or illegality of any act may sometimes determine whether it is to be viewed as a tort. In general, if a party in the exercise of a legal right, more especially if conferred by express statute, does an injury to another's property, he is not liable for damages, unless caused by the want of ordinary care and skill.[n]

In general, no right of action can arise from an illegal transaction.[o] But the rule does not interfere with the right of property even in articles the sale of which is forbidden by law.[p] A party may be debarred from an action by a license, by estoppel, or by a waiver.[q]

In general, a party injured cannot maintain an action for the injury if caused in any degree by his own neglect or wrong.[r] Various and nice distinctions, however, are made upon this general subject, involving the degree of neglect or wrong on the part of the plaintiff, which will debar him from maintaining an action, and its nature, as being proximate or only the remote cause of the injury.[s] But the whole question is in general for the jury.[t]

COMMISSION OF AND LIABILITY FOR TORTS.

A wrongful or malicious intent is an essential element in many torts, as, for example, assault, fraud, slander, and malicious prosecution. In general, a prominent distinction between torts and crimes is that in the former the party's intent is immaterial, while in a prosecution for the latter a criminal purpose must always be alleged and proved. On the other hand, an act which does not amount to a legal injury and violates no legal right, is not actionable because done with a bad intention.[u]

A tort may consist in the violation of a statute,[v] or the abuse of a privilege given by statute.[w] And, in general, though a party's original act or conduct may have been right and lawful, there may be such an abuse of the powers and privileges which the law confers upon him as will render him liable to an action —as for a trespass, in the first instance—or make him a trespasser ab initio.[x] Acts lawful and innocent in themselves may also become wrongful when done without just regard for the rights of others, and without suitable reference to the time, place, or manner of performing them.[y] But an action cannot be maintained for annoyance received from acts done on land adjoining the plaintiff's, which the proprietor might lawfully do in exercise of his dominion over his own.[z]

The most comprehensive and various class of torts consists of wrongs to property. In general, possession alone is sufficient to maintain an action for tort; while property alone is not sufficient without possession, or the right of possession.[a] Even a wrongful possessor may maintain an action against a third person in the title; and the title of a third person, unless the defendant claims under him, is no defence.[b] But where no one is in actual possession, the title is sufficient constructive possession to maintain an action; more especially possession of a part gives constructive possession of the whole.[c] And title is generally a good defence to an action founded upon mere possession.[d]

DEFENCE. With respect to the defence of one's self, wife, children, servants, etc., from torts, etc. See CRIMINAL LAW, "Self-defence." With respect to the defence or protection of one's personal property a man may repel force by force in its defence, and even justify homicide against one who manifestly intends or endeavors, by violence or surprise, to commit a known felony, as robbery. With respect to the defence or protection of personal property, although it is justifiable to even kill a person in the act of attempting to commit a forcible felony, as burglary or arson; yet such justification can only take place when the party in possession is wholly without fault.[e] And when an illegal forcible attack is made upon a dwelling-house, with the intention merely of committing a trespass, and not with any felonious intent, it is generally lawful for the rightful occupant to oppose it with force.[f] See DETAINER, above, and TRESPASS, below.

HARBORING. See APPRENTICESHIP.

INJURIES arise in three ways: 1. By nonfeasance, or the not doing what was a legal obligation, or duty, or contract, to perform. 2. Misfeasance, or the performance in an improper manner of an act which it was either the party's duty or his contract to perform. 3. Malfeasance, or the unjust performance of some act which the party had no right, or which he had contracted not to do.

The remedies are different as the injury affects private individuals or the public. When the injuries affect a private right and a private individual, although often also affecting the public, there are three descriptions of remedies. 1. The preventive, such as defence, resistance, recaption, abatement of nuisance, surety of the peace, injunction, etc. 2. Remedies for compensation, which may be by arbitration, suit, action, or summary proceedings before a justice of the peace. 3. Proceedings for punishment, as by indictment, or complaint, and prosecution before a justice of the peace. When the injury is such as to affect the public it becomes a crime or misdemeanor, and the party may be punished by indictment or conviction for the public injury or offence, and by civil action, at the suit of the party, for the private wrong. But in cases of felony, the remedy by action for the private injury is generally suspended, until the party particularly injured has fulfilled his duty to the public by prosecuting the offender for the public crime; and in cases of felony the remedy is merged in the felony.[g]

There are many injuries for which the law affords no remedy. In general, it interferes only where there has been a visible physical injury inflicted, while it leaves almost wholly unprotected the whole class of the most malignant mental injuries and sufferings, unless in a few cases where by a fiction it supposes some pecuniary loss, and sometimes affords compensation to wounded feelings. A parent, for example, cannot sue in that character for an injury inflicted on his child, and when his own domestic happiness has been destroyed, unless the fact will sustain the allegation that the daughter was the servant of her father, and that by reason of such seduction he has lost the benefit of her services. Again, a party cannot recover damages for verbal slander in many cases, as, where the facts published are true; for the defendant would justify their utterance by their truth, and the party injured must fail, nor will the law punish criminally the author of a verbal slander, imputing even the most infamous crimes, unless done with the intent to extort a chattel, money, or valuable thing. The law presumes that a man is incapable of being alarmed or affected by such injuries to his feelings.[h] The true and sufficient reasons for these rules are, the uncertain character of the injury inflicted, the impossibility and the danger supposing a pecuniary compensation to be attempted, that injustice would be done under the excitement of the case, hence the sound principle of the law, confirmed by experience, to inflict a punishment for crime; but not sell, through the agency of its courts, those wounded feelings which would constitute the grounds of such actions. See LIBEL; SLANDER, below.

LIBEL is any matter, written or printed, and published, and calculated to injure the character of another by bringing him into ridicule, hatred, or contempt.[i] Everything written or printed, which reflects upon the character of another, and is published without lawful justification or excuse, is a libel, whatever the intention may have been.[j] A malicious defamation, expressed either in printing or writing, tending either to blacken the memory of one who is dead, or the reputation of one who is alive, and expose him to public hatred, contempt, or ridicule, is libel.[k] A censorious or ridiculous writing, picture, or sign made with a malicious or mischievous intent towards government, magistrates, or individuals, is libel.[l] There is a great and well-settled distinction between verbal and written slander; and this not only in reference to the consequences, as subjecting the party to an indictment, but also as to the character of the accusations or imputations essential to sustain a civil action to recover damages. To write and publish maliciously anything of another which either makes him ridiculous, or holds him out as a dishonest man, is held to be actionable, or punishable criminally, when speaking the same words would not be so.[x] The reduction of the slanderous matter to writing or printing is the most usual mode or conveying it. The exhibition of a picture intimating that which in print would be libellous is equally criminal.[m] Fixing a gallows at a man's door, burning him in effigy, or exhibiting him in any ignominious manner, is a libel.[n] The above is a general description of libel, a branch of the law which is one of the most difficult to compress into a small compass.

Any publication which has a tendency to disturb the public peace, or good order of society, is indictable as a libel. This crime is committed by the publication of writings blaspheming the Supreme Being, or turning the doctrines of the Christian religion into contempt and ridicule; or tending, by their immodesty, to corrupt the mind, and to destroy the tone of decency, morality, and good order; or wantonly to defame or indecorously to calumniate the economy, order, and constitution of things which make up the general system of the law and government of the country; to degrade the administration of government, or of justice; or to cause animosities between our own and any foreign government, by personal abuse of its sovereign, its ambassadors, and other public ministers; and by malicious defamation, expressed in printing or writing, or by signs or pictures, tending either to blacken the memory of one who is dead, or the reputation of one who is living, and thereby to expose him to public hatred, contempt, and ridicule. This descriptive catalogue embraces all the several species of this offence which are indictable at common law; all of which are indictable either at common law or by virtue of particular statutes.[o] Libels against the memory of the dead, which have a tendency to create a breach of the peace, by inciting the friends and relatives of the deceased to avenge the insult of the family, render their authors liable to indictment. The malicious intention of the defendant to injure the family of the deceased must be expressly avowed and clearly proved.[p] If the matter is understood as scandalous, and is calculated to excite ridicule or abhorrence against the party intended, it is libellous, however it may be expressed.[q] The publisher of a libel is liable to be punished criminally by indictment,[r] or is subject to a civil action for damages by the party aggrieved. Both remedies may be pursued at the same time.[s] to character; and an action may be maintained in the following cases: To be actionable in themselves, the words when only spoken (not written) must be such as in their plain and popular sense convey to the minds of the hearers a charge of some offence for which the plaintiff is amenable to the law, or of having some disease which will exclude him from society. Words which are not actionable in themselves become so when they are spoken of a person in his profession, office, or trade, and necessarily or naturally tend to injure him therein. And any words defamatory or injurious in their nature, spoken of another, without legal justification, are actionable, if productive of special damage flowing naturally from slander. The term "libel" is applied to written or printed slander.[s]

In verbal slander. Actionable words are of two descriptions: first, those actionable in themselves, without proof of special damages; and, secondly, those actionable only in respect of some actual consequential damages.

Words of the first description must impute:

1. The guilt of some offence for which the party, if guilty, might be indicted and punished by the criminal courts: as, to call a person a "traitor," "thief," "highwayman," or to say that he is guilty of "perjury," "forgery," "murder," and the like. And although the imputation of guilt be general, without stating the particulars of the pretended crime, it is actionable.[u] An action will lie for all words spoken of another which impute to him the commission of a crime involving moral turpitude and which is punishable by law.[v]

2. That the party has a disease or distemper which renders him unfit for society.[w] An action can, therefore, be sustained for calling a man a leper.[x] Imputations of having at the present time the venereal disease or the gonorrhœa are actionable in themselves.[y] But charging another with having had a contagious disease is not actionable, as he will not on that account be excluded from society.[z]

3. Unfitness in an officer, who holds an office to which profit or emolument is attached, either in respect of morals or inability to discharge the duties of the office: in such a case an action lies.[a]

4. The want of integrity or capacity, whether mental or pecuniary, in the conduct of a profession, trade, or business, in which the party is engaged, is actionable;[b] as, to accuse an attorney or artist of inability, inattention, or want of integrity,[c] or a clergyman of being a drunkard,[d] is actionable. It is one of the general rules governing the action for words spoken, that words are actionable, when spoken of one in an office of profit, which have a natural tendency to occasion the loss of his office, or when spoken of persons touching their respective professions, trades, and business, and which have a natural tendency to their damage. The ground of action in these cases is that the party is disgraced or injured in his profession or trade, or exposed to the hazard of losing his office, in consequence of the slanderous words; not that his general reputation and standing in the community are affected by them. It will be recollected that the words spoken, in this class of cases, are not actionable of themselves, but that they become so in consequence of the special character of the party of whom they were spoken. The fact of his maintaining that special character, therefore, lies at the very foundation of the action.[e]

Of the second class are words which are actionable only in respect of special damages sustained by the party slandered. Though the law will not permit in these cases the inference of damage, yet when the damage has actually been sustained, the party aggrieved may support an action for the publication of an untruth;[f] unless the assertion be made for the assertion of a supposed claim;[g] but it lies if maliciously spoken. In this case special damage is the gist of the action, and must be particularly specified in the declaration. For it is an established rule that no evidence shall be received of any loss or injury which the plaintiff has sustained by the speaking of the words, unless it be specially stated in the declaration. And this rule applies equally where the special damage is the gist of the action and where the words are in themselves actionable.[h]

The charge must be false.[i] The falsity of the accusation is to be implied till the contrary is shown.[j] The instance of a master making an unfavorable representation of his servant, upon an application for his character, seems to be an exception, in that case there being a presumption, from the occasion of the speaking, that the words were true.[k]

The slander must, of course, be published, —that is, communicated to a third person,— and, if verbal, then in a language which he understands; otherwise the plaintiff's reputation is not impaired.[l] A letter addressed to the party, containing libellous matter, is not sufficient to maintain a civil action, though it may subject the libeller to an indictment, as tending to a breach of the peace.[m] The slander must be published respecting the plaintiff. A mother cannot maintain an action for calling her daughter a bastard.[o] In an action for slander, whether oral or written, it will afford no justification that the defamatory matter has been previously published by a third person, that the defendant at the time of his publication disclosed the name of that third person and believed all the statements to be true.[p] And a repetition of oral slander already in circulation, without expressing any disbelief of it, or any purpose of inquiring as to its truth, though without any design to extend its circulation or credit, or to cause the person to whom it is addressed to believe or suspect it to be true, is actionable.[q]

The words must be uttered without legal occasion, to render them actionable. On some occasions it is justifiable to utter slander of another; in others it is excusable, provided it be uttered without express malice.[r] It is justifiable for an attorney to use scandalous expressions in support of his client's cause and pertinent thereto.[s] Members of Congress and other legislative assemblies cannot be called to account for anything said in debate.

Malice is essential to the support of an action for slanderous words. But malice is, in general, to be presumed until the contrary be proved,[t] except in those cases where the occasion prima facie excuses the publication.[u]

SLANDER OF TITLE, or statements tending to cut down the extent of title, if malicious, injurious, and false, is actionable. The malice need not be in its worse sense, but with intent to injure the plaintiff. If the statement be true, if there is really the infirmity in the title that is suggested, no action will lie, no matter however malicious the defendant's intention may have been.[v]

TRESPASS is any misfeasance or act of one person whereby another is injuriously treated or damnified.[w] Any unlawful act committed with violence, actual or implied, to the person, property, or rights of another. Any unauthorized entry upon the realty of another to the damage thereof.

UPON PERSONAL PROPERTY.

An action lies for injuries to personal property, which may be committed by the several acts of unlawfully striking, chasing if alive, and carrying away to the damage of the plaintiff,[x] or by defacing, corrupting, or otherwise injuring, either by direct or remote means, a personal chattel, of which another is the owner, and in possession,[y] and for the removal or injury of inanimate personal property,[z] of which another has the possession, actual or constructive,[a] without the owner's assent. A naked possession or right to immediate possession is sufficient to support an action.[b]

UPON REAL PROPERTY.

An action lies for injuries to realty consequent upon entering without right upon another man's land. The enclosure may be purely imaginary,[c] but reaches to the sky and to the centre of the earth.[d] The plaintiff must be in possession with some title,[e] though mere title is sufficient where no one is in possession,[f] as in the case of an owner to the centre of a highway,[g] and mere possession is sufficient against a wrong-doer,[h] and the possession may be by an agent[i] but not by a tenant[j] other than a tenant at will.[k]

An action will not lie unless some damage is committed; but slight damage only is required. Some damage must have been done to sustain the action,[m] though it may have been very slight; as breaking glass.[n] An action will not lie where the defendant has a justification sufficient to excuse the act committed, though he acted without authority from the owner or the person affected,[o] and accident may in some cases excuse a trespass.[p]

The gist of an action for trespass is the injury done to the plaintiff's possession. To constitute trespass there must be a disturbance of the plaintiff's possession.[q] Where no one is in possession (the land being vacant and uncultivated) the party having the title or right of possession may maintain trespass.[r] It is settled that the owner of wild and uncultivated land is to be deemed in possession so as to maintain trespass, until an adverse possession is clearly made out.[s] Therefore, the plaintiff must allege and prove:

1. That the property was in his possession at the time of the injury, and this rightfully as against the defendant; and,

2. That the injury was committed by the defendant with force. The law always couples the idea of force with that of intrusion upon the property of another.[t]

Plaintiff's Possession. The possession of the plaintiff may be actual or constructive. And it is constructive when the property is either in the actual custody and occupation of no one, but rightfully belongs to the plaintiff. A tenant at will and one entitled to the mere profits of the soil, with the right of culture, may also sue and recover for an injury to the emblements to which he is entitled.[u] A general owner has also a constructive possession as against his tenant, who having a special property, has violated his trust by injuring or destroying that which was confided to him. Thus, if a tenant at will cuts down trees, the interest of the wrong-doer is thereby determined, and the possession, by legal intendment, immediately reverts to the owner or co-tenant, and proof of the wrongful act will maintain the allegation that the thing injured was in his possession.[v] So, if one enters upon land, and cuts timber upon a parol agreement for the purchase of the land, which he afterwards repudiates as void under the statute of frauds, his right of possession also is avoided ab initio, and is held to have remained in the owner, who may maintain trespass for cutting the trees.[w] And generally, where a right of entry, or other right of possession, is given by law, and it is afterwards abused by any act of unlawful force, the party is a trespasser ab initio.[x]

But where the general owner has conveyed to another the exclusive right of present possession and enjoyment, retaining to himself only a reversionary interest, the possession is that of the lessee, who alone can maintain an action of trespass for a forcible injury to the property. Thus, a tenant for years may have an action of trespass for cutting down trees.[y] And a tenant at will, for throwing down fences erected by himself, and destroying the grass.[z] The lessor or general owner never being permitted to maintain this action for an injury done to the property while it is in the possession of a lessee entitled to its exclusive enjoyment.[a]

Where the subject of the action is a partition fence between the lands of two adjoining proprietors, it is presumed to be the common property of both, unless the contrary is shown.[b] If it is proved to have been originally built upon the land of one of them, it is his; but if it were built equally upon the land of both, though at their joint expense, each is the owner in severalty of the part standing on his own land;[c] if the boundary is a hedge and one ditch, it is presumed to belong to him on whose side the hedge is; it being presumed that he who dug the ditch threw the earth upon his own land, which alone was lawful for him to do, and that the hedge was planted as is usual on the top of the bank thus raised,[d] but if there is a ditch on each side of the hedge, or no ditch at all, the hedge is presumed to be the common property of both proprietors.[e] If a tree grows so near the boundary line, that the roots extend into the soil of each proprietor, yet the property in the tree belongs to the owner of the land in which the tree was originally sown or planted.[f] But if the tree stands directly upon the line between adjoining owners, so that the line passes through it, it is the common property of both, whether it be marked as a boundary or not; and trespass will lie if one cuts it down without the consent of the other.[g]

Proof of an actual and exclusive possession by the plaintiff, even though it be by wrong, is sufficient to support an action against a mere stranger or wrong-doer, who has neither title to the possession in himself, nor authority from the legal owner.[h]

——Injury to. The plaintiff must, in the next place, prove that the injury was committed by the defendant, with force. And the defendant will be chargeable, if it appear that the act was done by his direction or command, or by his servant in the course of his master's business, or while executing his orders with ordinary care; or if it be done by his domestic or reclaimed animals.[i] The law of this State as to enclosures makes the party having a fence insufficient in law, guilty of negligence, and he cannot recover for injuries done his crops by stock running at large and roaming upon his land through such insufficient fence, nor can such a party recover even if the owner of the stock was himself chargeable with negligence, unless it amounts to a wilful, wanton or malicious want of care.[j] The object of the law regulating fences is not to protect a wanton trespass, nor a trespass with intent to injure.[k] It will not be necessary for the plaintiff to prove that the act was done with any wrongful intent; it being sufficient if it was done without a justifiable cause or purpose, though it were done accidentally, or by mistake.[l] And though the original entry or act of possession were by authority of law, yet if a subsequent act of force be unlawfully committed, such as would have made the party a trespasser if no authority or right existed, he is a trespasser ab initio.[m] Nor is it necessary, in order to enable a party to recover for injuries done to his property, caused by the negligence of others, that he should be entirely free from all negligence himself; but if his negligence is slight, and that of the other party is gross, or if his is remote, and that of the other is the proximate cause of the injury, he may recover.[n] It is a question of fact for the jury to determine, whether there has been negligence, and its nature and degree; but it is a question of law, for the court to determine, what degree of care and diligence on the one side, and of negligence on the other, will entitle the plaintiff to recover.[o] The allegation of the time when the trespass was committed is not ordinarily material to be proved; the plaintiff being at liberty to prove a trespass at any time before the commencement of the action, whether before or after the day laid in the complaint.

Defences. In the defence of this action, the general issue is not guilty; under which the defendant may give evidence of any facts tending to disprove either of the propositions which, as we have seen, the plaintiff is obliged to make out in order to maintain his action. And any matters which go to show that he never did the acts complained of may be given in evidence under the general issue. He may show under this issue that the freehold and immediate right of possession is, in himself, or in one under whom he claims title; thus disproving the plaintiff's allegation that the right of possession is in him.[p] But if he acted by license even from the plaintiff, without claiming title in himself;[q] or if he would justify under a custom to enter,[r] or under a right of way;[s] or if the injury was occasioned by the plaintiff's own negligence, or was done by the defendant from any other cause, short of any of such extraneous force as deprived him of all agency in the act, it cannot be shown under this issue, but must be specially pleaded.[t] So, also, matters in discharge of the action; but matters in mitigation of the wrong and damages which cannot be so pleaded, may be given in evidence under the general issue.[u] The general rule is, that all matters which confess and avoid, whether alleged by the plaintiff or defendant, must be specially pleaded, otherwise the proof of them is not admissible.[v]

In some cases trespass is justifiable, or, in other words, entry on another's land or house is not accounted trespass; as if a man comes to demand or pay money there payable, or to execute in a legal manner the process of the law. So, entering into an inn or public house without first asking the owner's leave, because when a man professes to keep an inn or public house, he thereby gives a general license to any person to enter his doors.[w] In like manner the law warrants the hunting of ravenous beasts of prey, because the destroying of such creatures is said to be profitable to the public.[x] But he cannot justify breaking the soil and digging him out of the earth; for though the law warrants the hunting of such noxious animals for the public good, yet it must be done in the ordinary and usual manner.[y] But in cases where a man misdemeans himself and makes ill use of the authority with which the law intrusts him, he is a trespasser ab initio.[z] If a defendant justifies the destruction of the plaintiff's property, by the defence of his own, he must aver and prove that he could not otherwise preserve his own property.[a] If, however, the plaintiff's dog were killed in the act of pursuing the defendant's deer in his park, or rabbits in his warren, or poultry within his own grounds, or worrying or injuring sheep, this will justify the killing without any higher necessity.[b] If the issue is upon a right to dig and take gravel or other material for necessary repairs, the defendant must allege and prove that the repairs were necessary, and that the materials were used or in the process of being used for that purpose.[c]

If the defendant succeeds in establishing a title to that part of the premises on which the trespass was committed, he is entitled to recover, though he does not prove a title to the whole premises.[d]

VEXATIOUS SUITS, which are instituted maliciously, without probable cause, whereby damage has resulted to the defendant whether they are criminal prosecutions before a magistrate or civil actions, are another class of torts or wrongs. Such a suit need not be altogether without foundation; if the part which is groundless has subjected the party to an inconvenience to which he would not have been exposed had the valid cause of complaint alone have been insisted on, it is injurious.[e] To make it vexatious the suit must have been instituted maliciously, as malice in any case of injurious conduct necessarily to be inferred from the total absence of probable cause for exciting it, and in the present instance the law will not allow it to be so inferred from that circumstance, for fear of being mistaken; it casts upon the suffering party the burden of proving express malice.[f] It is necessary that the prosecution should have been carried on without probable cause; the law presumes that probable cause existed until the party aggrieved can show the contrary, hence he is bound to show the total absence of probable cause;[g] he is also under the same obligation when the original proceeding was a civil action.[h] The damage which the party injured sustains from a vexatious suit for a crime, as either to his person, his reputation, his estate, or his relative rights: 1. Whenever imprisonment is occasioned by a malicious, unfounded criminal prosecution, the injury is complete, although the detention may have been momentary, and the party released on bail.[i] 2. When the bill of indictment contains scandalous aspersions likely to impair the reputation of the accused, the damage is complete.[j] 3. Notwithstanding his person is left at liberty, and his character is unstained by the proceedings (as when the indictment is for trespass);[k] yet if he necessarily incurs expense in defending himself against the charge, he has a right to have his losses made good.[l] If a master loses the services and assistance of his domestics in consequence of a vexatious suit, he may claim a compensation.[m]

Concerning the damage resulting from a civil action, when prosecuted in a court of competent jurisdiction, the only detriment a party can sustain is the imprisonment of his person, or the seizure of his property; as to any expense he may be put to, the law contemplates that the costs adjudged fully compensate him.[n] It would be otherwise if the suit were brought in an improper court, and imprisonment of the person or seizure of one's property is made.[o]

Usage of trade does not require to be immemorial to become established; if it be known, certain, uniform, reasonable, and not contrary to law, it is sufficient. But evidence that a thing has been done in few instances does not establish usage.[p] The usages of trade afford ground upon which a proper construction may be given to contracts. By their aid the indeterminate intention of the parties, and the nature and extent of their contracts arising from mere implications or presumptions, and acts of an equivocal character, may be ascertained, and the meaning of words and doubtful expressions may become known.[q] Courts will not readily adopt these usages, because they are not unfrequently founded in mistake.[r]

WEIGHTS AND MEASURES.

A MEASURE is a means or standard for computing amount. A certain quantity of some thing taken for a unit, and which expresses a relation with other quantities of the same thing.

WEIGHT is a quality in natural bodies by which they tend towards the centre of the earth. The weights now generally used in the United States are the same as those of England.

The Constitution of the United States gives power to Congress to "fix the standard of weights and measures."[s] This power has never been exercised. By a resolution of Congress of the 14th of June, 1836, the secretary of the treasury is directed to cause a complete set of all weights and measures adopted as standards, and now either made or in the progress of manufacture, for the use of the several custom houses, and for other purposes, to be delivered to the governor of each State in the Union, or to such person as he may appoint, for the use of the States respectively, to the end that a uniform standard of weights and measures may be established throughout the United States.[t] The States possess the power to legislate on this subject, or at least the existing standards at the adoption of the constitution remain in full force.[u]

METRIC SYSTEM OF WEIGHTS AND MEASURES.

In the year 1866 the Congress of the United States passed a bill authorizing the use of a new system of weights and measures. In this system the principal denomination is the metre, from which all the other denominations in all the tables are derived. Hence, this system is called the metric system.

The principal denomination for the measure of surface is the are; for the measure of capacity, the litre; and for weight, the gram.

The lower denominations in each table are tenths, hundredths, or thousandths of these; and their names are formed by prefixing deci, centi, or milli to the name of the principal denomination.

The higher denominations are 10, 100, 1,000, or 10,000 times the principal denomination of any table; and their names are formed by prefixing deka, hecto, kilo, or myria to the name of that principal denomination.

The weights and measures of this system are in general use in France, Belgium, Spain, and Portugal; and their use has been legalized by Great Britain, Italy, Norway, Sweden, Greece, Mexico, and most of the South American governments.

For scientific purposes the grain only is used, and sets of weights are used constructed in decimal progression from 10,000 grains downward to one-hundreth of a grain. The carat used for weighing diamonds is three and one-sixth grains.

PART II.

COLLECTION

CLAIMS, DEBTS AND DEMANDS.

WHEN a claim, debt or demand is due or overdue; when payment is unreasonably deferred or refused; when satisfaction can only be had by aggressive action on the part of the creditor, it becomes necessary for him to inquire into the various methods of collecting or securing such claim, etc.

1. Amicable adjustment of Claims, Debts and Demands by parties. As between parties a claim may be satisfied, paid or adjusted in any manner, as by part payment, services, goods, etc., etc. It may also be secured in various ways, by note of hand; by note of hand with a sufficient indorser; by an order on and accepted by a third responsible party; by a mortgage, pledge, etc., etc.

2. Arbitration by third persons when a Claim, Debt or Demand is disputed. When parties are unable to adjust claims, debts or demands between themselves, and wish to avoid the expense and incident of a suit at law, they may agree upon a person or persons before whom to submit the points of controversy, and abide his or their decision.

See INDEX. Arbitration.

3. Action or suit to recover or defeat a Claim, Debt or Demand. Whether the demand, debt or claim be disputed or not, it is often necessary to commence an action or suit for its recovery, to which suit a legal defence, set-off or counter-claim must be interposed, or judgment will be obtained so far as far as the demand, etc., is proved, often for the amount (sometimes unjustly) claimed. Where the parties are in the same neighborhood, or at a convenient distance, the matter may be attended to personally or by agent or attorney. Where they reside or do business at a distance from each other, this must be done through agents or attorneys. In the latter case, the following forms of correspondence may be observed by the creditor:

Letter of Inquiry.

Place ——, Date ——, 18—.

A. Y., Esq., Attorney-at-law, at ——, in ——, in —— county, State of ——.

Dear Sir:—I herewith enclose you a copy of an account or note, or other evidence of debt (naming it), in my favor and against D. R., of ——, engaged in (state business) at ——, in your city (or county). Be kind enough to state your terms and prospect of collection, and oblige yours, etc., C. R.

Order to Collect.

Place ——, Date ——, 18—.

A. Y., Esq., Attorney-at-law, at ——, in ——, in —— county, State of ——

Dear Sir:—Please collect the enclosed (account or note, etc.) in my favor and against D. R., and remit the same, less your fees, as per terms stated in your note of ——, inst.: Providing, That if the same is found to be worthless, that it be returned to me without charge,

Yours, etc., C. R.

(When security for costs is required add:)

Enclosed find $—, as per your request, to pay cost in advance (or to secure the costs of this suit).

WHAT COURTS TO SUE IN.

Justices' Courts afford a simple and speedy means of collecting small claims and demands without delay, and their judgments are, when filed in the office of the clerk of the proper court, as efficient a lien of the debtor's real estate, as the judgment of a court of record. This is a simple and inexpensive mode of obtaining a judgment and lien. The proceedings of courts of general jurisdiction are more direct, and must be resorted to for the collection of large claims and enforcing general remedies.

When an Action or Suit May be Commenced.

Limitation. By the common law, a party who had any legal ground of complaint against another, might compel him to answer in a court at such time as suited his convenience. This privilege was not only productive of inconvenience, but often of great injustice. Parties might, and often did, wait till witnesses were dead, or papers destroyed, etc., and then proceed to enforce claims which at an earlier date might have been honestly defeated. To prevent these evils, insecurity in title, uncertainty of tenure of property, and fruitful subjects of litigation, statutes were passed, limiting the time within which a party having a cause of action should appeal to courts for redress. These statutes are called Statutes of Limitation.

When Costs are Required in Advance.

Costs. The object of requiring security for costs in any case is, that the defendant may have some responsible party within the jurisdiction of the court to whom he can look for the payment thereof in the event he succeeds in the action or suit (15 Wis. 54). When security for costs is required, a fee should accompany the claim, so that the costs may be secured by resident surety or paid at the commencement of the action or suit.

Process in an Action or Suit.

In a Suit or Action a Summons notifies the defendant to appear at a certain time and place to answer whether he owes the debt or not, and if he has a set-off or defence, to then present it.

An Order of Arrest or Capias compels him not only to answer the debt, but also the acts of fraud in contracting or afterwards trying fraudulently to cheat his creditor out of his dues, and may also commit him to prison.

An Order of Attachment effects the seizure of such goods and property as can be found.

Garnishee or Trustee Process effects a discovery of goods, debts, effects, etc., etc., in the hands of outside or third parties, and compels their delivery of the same to satisfy such judgment as may be obtained.

Judgment, Execution, etc., are noticed above and below.

Arrest and Imprisonment for Debt.

Arrest and Imprisonment for Debt are proceedings of so summary a character that few persons of responsibility will risk either without the strongest evidence to support the one, or as a last means of obtaining satisfaction of a judgment through the other. Arrest is allowed in many of the States, but only in cases of fraud; fraud in obtaining goods, moneys, etc., or fraudulently secreting, selling, removing his property to avoid the payment of just debts, etc., etc. Imprisonment for debt is, with a few exceptions, generally abolished.

The proceedings are generally as follows: An affidavit is made by the creditor, his agent, or attorney, charging the debtor with the acts of fraud, etc. A bond is given by the creditor to indemnify the debtor if his arrest should be wrongful, etc. A writ is then issued for the apprehension of the debtor. When arrested, the debtor is brought before court to answer the charges of fraud, which, if proved, justify his imprisonment until he gives up the goods, property, etc., or is lawfully discharged from confinement.

Attachment, Garnishment, Trustee Process.

Attachment, Garnishment, Trustee Process, etc. (i. e., seizing goods or property of the debtor either before, during, or after the suit), is common to every State.

Attachment Proper is seizing either goods or property of the debtor for the debt, where he is charged with fraudulently concealing, selling or removing, etc., of them. Garnishment, Trustee Process, etc., is as follows: D owes C a debt, D has no property of his own, in his own hands or possession, but some one else has, or is indebted to him. C discovers this, and as an attachment proper could only take property of D, in D's own hands, or some place where it could be come at directly, C must resort to some other process. This is called a Garnishee or Trustee Process—that is, a writ which compels this outside party to come into court and tell what he has, holds, controls, or owes to D, and to deliver it over to the officer holding the garnishee or trustee writ, that it may be used to satisfy the creditor's claim or demand.

The Trial of an Action or Suit and its Incidents. See below.

The Nature and Effect of a Judgment

Judgments, once obtained, are evidence to the whole world of the facts they contain—they cannot be impeached or disputed. The only way to affect them is to pay or satisfy them. They may be transferred from one county to another, from State to State, from country to country, and from court to court; they always face the debtor, and are always ready for any excess over and above the exemptions allowed by law. They gradually increase by the addition of interest.

COURTS AND PARTIES APPEARING THEREIN, etc.

Judges and Officers of Courts.

A judge or justice cannot sit or act in cases where he is a party, or is interested, or where he is related to either party by consanguinity or affinity.

A judge or justice cannot practice in his own court.

A judge or justice will not have a partner practice in his own court.

A judge or justice will not take part in a trial when his partner is attorney or counsel therein.

A judge or justice will not have a voice in decisions where he has been attorney or counsel.

Partners of clerks of judges or Court officers do not practice before their judges.

Clerks of Courts and other ministerial officers do not practice as attorneys in their own courts.

Courts are always open to the public.

Legal Proceedings.

Legal Proceedings must be in the English language, without abbreviation; numbers may be expressed in figures.

A party may always appear in person or by attorney. Any person of full age and sound mind, may prosecute or defend any action or suit of his own, or any defense against an action or suit brought against him by another, in any court or tribunal.

Any person of good moral character, although not an attorney, may manage, prosecute, or defend the suit of another person, if he is specially authorized to do so by the party for whom he appears. This authority may be by request when in court, or by written authority when the party suing, or sued, is absent.

Costs of suit generally fall upon the losing party; whatever costs have been prepaid are included in the bill of costs.

WHERE TO COMMENCE AN ACTION OR SUIT.

An action or suit must be brought before a court or judge or justice, who has a right to and can legally hear and determine it, otherwise his judgment would be like that of any other person without authority.

For example:

1. A justice of the peace has the right and authority to hear and determine actions or suits upon accounts, bills, bonds, contracts, judgments, notes, etc., etc., as well as for damages in some instances, and many other things, up to a certain sum or amount, beyond which he cannot lawfully go, even though the parties to the suit agree that he may; for the law has said what he shall do, and this is his only authority. On the other hand justices of the peace cannot sit to try the title to land, suits for slander, libel, breach of marriage contract, etc., for they have no authority by law to do so, and, besides, they are specially prohibited by law from trying suits of this character.

2. The justice having the right and authority to try the matter, in order to exercise it upon application of a party suing, must bring the party required to answer before him; this is done by a summons, and in suits before justices it is often absolutely necessary to sue a person in the same town or township in which he resides, though generally he may be sued anywhere in the county.

Parties may, however, appear before any justice or court, and in any county, township or place they choose, and there submit their controversy.

How to Commence an Action or Suit.

An action or suit may be commenced by voluntary appearance and agreement of parties, or by legal processes issued at the instance and request of the party complaining.

1. If by agreement the parties appear before the court or justice, and submit their controversy, with such evidence as they may require or present, and the court or justice decides such controversy, and so enters his judgment upon his docket or record, and judgment stands and execution issues, in the same manner as in an ordinary action or suit.

2. When by legal process. Upon application (and filing one's account, bill, bond, claim, demand, note or other "cause of action," which is called a "complaint," "statement of demand," "bill of particulars," etc., etc., according to the custom of the court), a summons is issued and directed to the constable or other officer, who serves it upon the party complained of, who is called the defendant. This summons commands the defendant to appear before the court or justice at a certain place and time, to answer the plaintiff's demand (describing it), and to set up whatever defense he may have to it. In addition to the summons (which is merely a notice to appear and answer), there are cases in which the defendant may be arrested, and also cases where his goods and effects may be attached, and also the money and property due him from persons indebted to him or having such property, may be taken or retained.

These forms of process are described under ARREST and ATTACHMENT above.

Witnesses may be compelled to attend and give their evidence. The party desiring their evidence should give their names to the court or justice and request him to subpœna them for the trial; and if they fail to attend, he should request the court to compel their attendance, which is done by attaching them and bringing them forcibly into court, there to answer for their contempt or excuse it, and give their evidence in the case as well.

Every person offered as a witness must be affirmed or sworn before giving any testimony.

NOTE.—The plaintiff's demand or cause of action should be given to the court or justice to be filed, when he obtains his summons. The defendant's set-off or defence should be given to the court or justice when he appears on the day of trial or by his evidence.

How to Try an Action or Suit.

On the day of trial the party may conduct his own suit or defense, or have an attorney or other competent person do so for him.

If a party is under twenty-one years of age, he must sue or defend by guardian or next friend. (The court will attend to this upon the suggestion of any person.)

All parties should be in prompt attendance at the time fixed for trial (and in no event later than within one hour thereafter, though in some cases this will be too late)

Trial by Jury.

If a jury is desired by either party, such party should request it of the court or justice, who issues a summons or venire for the number of jurors required by law or agreed on by the parties.

When it is time for the jurors to appear their names are called out by the officer, and they are seated together and sworn for the purpose of ascertaining their competency to sit in the case.

If there are persons upon the jury that a party would rather dispense with, he can request the court or justice to excuse them from serving. The number of objections are limited, and therefore a party should discreetly choose the most objectionable persons first.

The jury will then be sworn by the court or justice, and hear the proofs and allegations of parties, and after the court's remarks or charge, if there be any, they retire and agree upon their verdict, and return it to the court, and the court thereupon gives judgment accordingly.

Trial by the Court.

If a jury is not desired by either party, the parties, if present, submit their proofs by witnesses or other testimony, and make whatever argument they wish to, and thereupon the court or justice finds for the party having, in his opinion, the preponderance or greater weight of evidence to support his side of the case, and renders and enters judgment accordingly.

The Law and Evidence.

For points in the various subjects concerning ACCOUNTS, BILLS, BONDS, NOTES, EVIDENCE, CONTRACTS, etc., etc.

See INDEX TO LAW, post.

Incidents to the Trial by the Court or a Jury.

If the defendant, being served with a summons, neglects to appear, the court or justice will proceed to hear the proofs of the plaintiff, and give judgment thereon.

The plaintiff's account, bill, bond, claim, demand, note, or other cause of action, and defendant's matters of defense, when required by the law, the court or justice or plaintiff, being filed and their substance or copy entered by the justice on his docket or record, the plaintiff proceeds and proves his account, demand, etc., by such proofs as is necessary, and the defendant, on the close of the plaintiff's evidence, produces his proofs, in case he has any, to defeat, lessen, or modify the plaintiff's demands or charges against him.

When a defendant establishes a set-off equal or exceeding the plaintiff's claim, judgment will be rendered in his favor, and also for the costs of this suit. But if it be for less than the plaintiff's claim, the plaintiff will have judgment for the residue and also for costs.

When the defendant's defense defeats the plaintiff's claim only, judgment will be in the defendant's favor for costs.

If the plaintiff fails to appear on the day of trial, the case may be dismissed with costs; and if the defendant have a set-off, this may be proven and judgment obtained.

If the defendant fails to appear on the day of trial, the plaintiff will take judgment for so much of his claim as he proves, for the full amount often, although it really exceed his just dues.

Adjournments.

A trial may be adjourned for a reasonable time by consent of parties, or on the application and oath of a party, on sufficient cause, as, the absence of a material witness or testimony, etc., but the application should be made before proceeding to trial.

Judgment.

Judgment may be rendered upon the admission or confession in person by the defendant, or upon being established by competent witnesses.

Judgment may also be rendered by dismissing the case without affecting its merits in any way; this occurs where a plaintiff fails to appear at trial, or at the time to which the case is adjourned, also when the plaintiff discontinues or withdraws his action. In such case the judgment is for costs only.

Execution, etc.

Execution follows upon judgment, in favor of the successful party in the action. It may issue at once, in a few days, weeks, or months, at the option of the party succeeding in the suit. After a time (generally defined by law) from the date of serving the last execution, the judgment, in general, must be revived before an execution can issue.

EXECUTION is of four kinds:

1. Against the goods and chattels of the debtor.

2. Against the lands and tenements of the debtor.

3. Against the body of the debtor.

4. Against all or either goods, chattels, lands, tenements, and the body of the debtor.

THE FIRST MAY BE EFFECTUAL by an immediate issue and levy upon what goods may be found, and may be further assisted by the attachment, garnishee, or trustee process.

It may be defeated by the exemption law, assignment or insolvency law, or the corrupting of the officer who serves it.

THE SECOND IS MADE UNNECESSARY by having a transcript of the judgment filed in the office of every clerk of a court of record of every county wherein the judgment debtor has lands, in the State where this judgment was rendered. (Executions must then be issued, within say —— years—different times in different States—or the judgment will cease to be a lien upon the real estate.)

If judgment is rendered in another State, then, in order to have it effectual in this State, suit must be brought on it, and then upon judgment on such judgment, a filing of transcripts in the offices of clerks of courts of record in each county where the debtor has lands, effects a lien as above stated, wherever filed.

THE THIRD IS ALLOWED IN CASES OF FRAUD.

FOURTH. Execution also issues against goods, chattels, lands, tenements and effects of the debtor. It also issues against goods, chattels, lands, tenements (and the body of the debtor, whenever fraud is shown).

NATIONAL BANKRUPTCY LAW.

The Act of Congress entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States," approved July 1, 1898, while it does not render State insolvency or bankruptcy laws void, yet makes them inoperative in so far as they conflict with those of Congress, and so long as the national act remains unrepealed.

TO WHOM THE ACT APPLIES.

Any person who owes debts, except a corporation, shall be entitled to the benefits of the act as a voluntary bankrupt and become discharged from his debts as hereinafter stated, and may file his own petition for that purpose.

Any natural person, except a wage-earner or a person engaged chiefly in farming or the tillage of the soil, any unincorporated company, and any corporation engaged principally in manufacturing, trading, printing, publishing, or mercantile pursuits, owing debts to the amount of one thousand dollars or over, may be adjudged an involuntary bankrupt upon default or an impartial trial, and shall be subject to the provisions and entitled to the benefits of this act. Private bankers, but not national banks or banks incorporated under State or Territorial laws, may be adjudged involuntary bankrupts.

A partnership may be adjudged a bankrupt; its property will be applied primarily to paying partnership debts, and that of an individual bankrupt partner will be applied primarily to the payment of his individual debts. Should any surplus of the partnership assets remain after paying his individual debts, it will be applied to payment of the partnership debts, and if any surplus remains of the partnership assets, after payment of the partnership debts, such portion of it as the individual partner is entitled to will be applied to paying his individual debts. Where one partner is a bankrupt and another not, he who is not can prevent the partnership property being administered in bankruptcy by himself settling the partnership business as expeditiously as its nature will admit, and accounting for the interest of the bankrupt partner.

WHAT ARE ACTS OF BANKRUPTCY.

Acts of bankruptcy by a person (and this includes corporations, partnerships, and women) shall consist of his having (1) conveyed, transferred, concealed, or removed, or permitted to be concealed or removed, any part of his property, with intent to hinder, delay, or defraud his creditors, or any of them; or (2) transferred, while insolvent, any portion of his property to one or more of his creditors with intent to prefer such creditors over his other creditors; or (3) suffered or permitted, while insolvent, any creditor to obtain a preference through legal proceedings, and not having at least five days before a sale or final disposition of any property affected by such preference vacated or discharged such preference; or (4) made a general assignment for the benefit of his creditors; or (5) admitted in writing his inability to pay his debts and his willingness to be adjudged a bankrupt on that ground. In case of a contest the burden of proof as to his solvency is upon the alleged bankrupt.

A person is deemed insolvent within the meaning of the act whenever the aggregate of his property, exclusive of any property which he may have conveyed, transferred, concealed, or removed, or permitted to be concealed or removed, with intent to defraud, hinder, or delay his creditors, shall not, at a fair valuation, be sufficient in amount to pay his debts.

Proceedings may be instituted against a person who is insolvent and who has committed an act of bankruptcy within four months after the commission of such act. Such time shall not expire until four months after the date of the recording or registering of the transfer or assignment, when the act consists in having made a transfer or assignment of any of his property with intent to hinder, delay or defraud his creditors, or for the purpose or giving a preference as above mentioned, of when it consists of a general assignment for the benefit of his creditors, if by law such recording or registering is required or permitted, or if it is not, from the date when the beneficiary takes notorious, exclusive or continuous possession of the property, unless the petitioning creditors have received actual notice of such transfer or assignment.

If a bankrupt shall have given a preference within four months before the filing of a petition, or after the filing of the petition and before the adjudication, and the person receiving it, or to be benefited thereby, or his agent acting therein, shall have had reasonable cause to believe that it was intended thereby to give a preference, it shall be voidable by the trustee, and he may recover the property or its value from such person.

If pending a decision as to whether a person has committed an act of bankruptcy, the applicant desires the alleged bankrupt property to be taken charge of, he must give bond to indemnify the respondent against costs, expenses, and damages, by reason of such seizure; and if the petition for a decree of bankruptcy be dismissed by the court or withdrawn by the petition, the respondent or respondents shall be allowed all costs, counsel fees, expenses, and damages occasioned by such seizure or detention. Counsel fees, costs, expenses, and damages shall be fixed and allowed by the court and paid by the obligors in such bond.

COURTS OF BANKRUPTCY.

The District Courts of the United States, the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, the District Courts of the several Territories, and United States courts in the Indian Territory and of Alaska are courts of bankruptcy.

United States Circuit Courts have concurrent jurisdiction with the courts of bankruptcy within their respective territorial limits of offenses against the bankruptcy act. Appeals may be taken to the higher United States courts under circumstances and upon compliance with the conditions imposed by law.

DUTIES OF BANKRUPTS.

A bankrupt must obey all lawful orders of the court, examine the correctness of all proofs of claims filed against his estate, and generally furnish such information as shall facilitate the settlement of his estate to the end that equity and justice may be done. If he be an insolvent bankrupt he must prepare, make oath to and file within 10 days after he is declared a bankrupt by the court, unless specially allowed a longer time, a complete itemized schedule of his property, with the value thereof and a list of his creditors, with the particulars of his debt to each.

If it appear that a bankrupt is about to leave to avoid being examined as to his affairs, and that his departure will defeat the proceedings in bankruptcy, the court or a judge may order the marshal to keep him in custody, but not imprison him, temporarily, or until he give bond to appear for such examination.

COMPOSITIONS.

A bankrupt may make a composition with his creditors with the consent of a majority of them in numbers, representing a majority in amount of claims, if the money necessary to pay them the amount agreed upon and to pay preferred claims and the costs of proceeding be actually deposited subject to the order of the judge, said bankrupt having been first examined as to his assets and liabilities in open court or at a meeting of his creditors, and having filed in court a schedule of his property and a list of his creditors above referred to, provided the judge be satisfied that the composition is for the best interests of his creditors, and that the bankrupt has done his duty and acted in good faith in the premises. A composition may be set aside within six months after comfirmation of the same by the court, if it appear that fraud was practiced in procuring the same.

A certified copy of an order confirming a composition shall constitute evidence of revesting of title of his property in the bankrupt, and if recorded shall impart the same notice that a deed from the trustee to the bankrupt, if recorded, would impart.

DISCHARGE OF DEBTS.

When Granted.—Any person may, after the expiration of one month and within the next twelve months subsequent to being adjudged a bankrupt, file an application for a discharge in the court of bankruptcy in which the proceedings are pending; if it shall be made to appear to the judge that the bankrupt was unavoidably prevented from filing it within such time, it may be filed within but not after the expiration of the next six months.

The judge shall hear an application for a discharge, and such proofs and pleas as may be made in opposition thereto by parties in interest, at such time as will give parties in interest a reasonable opportunity to be fully heard, and investigate the merits of the application and discharge the applicant unless he has (1) committed an offense punishable by imprisonment as herein provided; or (2) with fraudulent intent to conceal his true financial condition and in contemplation of bankruptcy, destroyed, concealed, or failed to keep books of account or records from which his true condition might be ascertained.

The confirmation of a composition shall discharge the bankrupt from his debts, other than those agreed to be paid by the terms of the composition and those not affected by a discharge.

When Revoked.—The judge may, upon the application of parties in interest who have not been guilty of undue laches, filed at any time within one year after a discharge shall have been granted, revoke it upon a trial if it shall be made to appear that it was obtained through the fraud of the bankrupt, and that the knowledge of the fraud has come to the petitioners since the granting of the discharge, and that the actual facts did not warrant the discharge.

Co-debtors of Bankrupts.—The liability of a person who is a co-debtor with, or guarantor or in any manner a surety for, a bankrupt shall not be altered by the discharge of such bankrupt.

Debts not Affected by a Discharge.—A discharge in bankruptcy shall release a bankrupt from all of his provable debts, except such as (1) are due as a tax levied by the United States, the State, county, district, or municipality in which he resides; (2) are judgments in actions for frauds, or obtaining property by false pretenses or false representations, or for willful and malicious injuries to the person or property of another; (3) have not been duly scheduled in time for proof and allowance, with the name of the creditor if known to the bankrupt, unless such creditor had notice or actual knowledge of the proceedings in bankruptcy; or (4) were created by his fraud, embezzlement, misappropriation, or defalcation while acting as an officer or in any fiduciary capacity.

CREDITORS.

Meetings.—The court shall cause the first meeting of the creditors of a bankrupt to be held, not less than ten nor more than thirty days after the adjudication, at the county seat of the county in which the bankrupt has had his principal place of business, resided, or had his domicile; or if that place would be manifestly inconvenient as a place of meeting for the parties in interest, or if the bankrupt is one who does not do business, reside, or have his domicile within the United States, the court shall fix a place for the meeting which is the most convenient for parties in interest. If such meeting should by any mischance not be held within such time, the court shall fix the date, as soon as may be thereafter, when it shall be held.

At the first meeting of creditors the judge or referee, shall preside, and, before proceeding with the other business, may allow or disallow the claims of creditors there presented, and may publicly examine the bankrupt or cause him to be examined at the instance of any creditor.

The creditors shall at each meeting take such steps as may be pertinent and necessary for the promotion of the best interests of the estate and the enforcement of this act.

A meeting of creditors, subsequent to the first one, may be held at any time and place when all of the creditors who have secured the allowance of their claims sign a written consent to hold a meeting at such time and place.

The court shall call a meeting of creditors whenever one-fourth or more in number of those who have proven their claims shall file a written request to that effect; if such request is signed by a majority of such creditors, which number represents a majority in amount of such claims, and contains a request for such meeting to be held at a designated place, the court shall call such meeting at such place within thirty days after the date of the filing of the request.

Whenever the affairs of the estate are ready to be closed a final meeting of creditors shall be ordered.

Voters at Meetings of Creditors.—Creditors shall pass upon matters submitted to them at their meetings by a majority vote in number and amount of claims of all creditors whose claims have been allowed and are present, except as by law otherwise provided.

Creditors holding claims which are secured or have priority shall not, in respect to such claims, be entitled to vote at creditors' meetings, nor shall such claims be counted in computing either the number of creditors or the amount of their claims, unless the amounts of such claims exceed the values of such securities or priorities, and then only for such excess.

Proof and Allowance of Claims.—Proof of claims shall consist of a statement under oath, in writing, signed by a creditor setting forth the claim, the consideration therefor, and whether any, and, if so, what, securities are held therefor, and whether any, and, if so, what, payments have been made thereon, and that the sum claimed is justly owing from the bankrupt to the creditor.

Whenever a claim is founded upon an instrument of writing, such instrument, unless lost or destroyed, shall be filed with the proof of claim. If such instrument is lost or destroyed, a statement of such fact and of the circumstances of such loss or destruction shall be filed under oath with the claim. After the claim is allowed or disallowed, such instrument may be withdrawn by permission of the court, upon leaving a copy thereof on file with the claim.

Claims after being proved may, for the purpose of allowance, be filed by the claimants in the court where the proceedings are pending, or before the referee if the case has been referred.

Claims which have been duly proved shall be allowed, upon receipt by or upon presentation to the court, unless objection to their allowance shall be made by parties in interest, or their consideration be continued for cause by the court upon its own motion.

Claims of secured creditors and those who have priority may be allowed to enable such creditors to participate in the proceedings at creditors' meetings held prior to the determination of the value of their securities or priorities, but shall be allowed for such sums only as to the courts seem to be owing over and above the value of their securities or priorities.

The claims of creditors who have received preferences shall not be allowed unless such creditors shall surrender their preferences.

The value of securities held by secured creditors shall be determined by converting the same into money according to the terms of the agreement pursuant to which such securities were delivered to such creditors or by such creditors and the trustee, by agreement, arbitration, compromise, or litigation, as the court may direct, and the amount of such value shall be credited upon such claims, and a dividend shall be paid only on the unpaid balance.

Whenever a creditor, whose claim against a bankrupt estate is secured by the individual undertaking of any person, fails to prove such claim, such person may do so in the creditor's name, and if he discharge such undertaking in whole or in part he shall be subrogated to that extent to the rights of the creditor.

Debts owing to the United States, a State, a county, a district, or a municipality as a penalty or forfeiture shall not be allowed, except for the amount of the pecuniary loss sustained by the act, transaction, or proceeding out of which the penalty or forfeiture arose, with reasonable and actual costs occasioned thereby and such interest as may have accrued thereon according to law.

Claims which have been allowed may be reconsidered for cause and reallowed or rejected in whole or in part, according to the equities of the case, before but not after the estate has been closed.

Ordinarily, claims cannot be proved after the expiration of one year from the date when the party is adjudged a bankrupt.

Notice to Creditors.—Creditors are entitled to ten day's notice by mail of nearly all important steps in the proceedings after presentation of the petition. Notice of the first meeting of creditors shall be published, the last publication to be at least one week prior to the date fixed for the meeting. All notices shall be given by the referees unless otherwise ordered by the judge.

Who may File Petitions in Involuntary Bankruptcy.—Three or more creditors who have provable claims against any person which amount in the aggregate, in excess of the value of securities held by them, if any, to five hundred dollars or over; or if all of the creditors of such person are less than twelve in number, then one of such creditors whose claim equals such amount may file a petition to have him adjudged an involuntary bankrupt.

Petitions shall be filed in duplicate, one copy for the clerk and one for service on the bankrupt.

If it be averred in the petition that the creditors of the bankrupt are less than twelve in number, and less than three creditors have joined as petitioners therein, and the answer avers the existence of a larger number of creditors, there shall be filed with the answer a list under oath of all the creditors, with their addresses, and thereupon the court shall cause all such creditors to be notified of the pendency of such petition and shall delay the hearing upon such petition for a reasonable time, to the end that parties in interest shall have an opportunity to be heard; if upon such hearing it shall appear that a sufficient number have joined in such petition, or if prior to or during such hearing a sufficient number shall join therein, the case may be proceeded with, but otherwise it shall be dismissed.

In computing the number of creditors of a bankrupt for the purpose of determining how many creditors must join in the petition, such creditors as were employed by him at the time of the filing of the petition or are related to him by consanguinity or affinity within the third degree, as determined by the common law, and have not joined in the petition, shall not be counted.

Creditors other than original petitioners may at any time enter their appearance and join in the petition, or file an answer and be heard in opposition to the prayer of the petition.

A voluntary or involuntary petition shall not be dismissed by the petitioner or petitioners or for want of prosecution or by consent of parties until after notice to the creditors.

TRIALS AND PROCEDURE.

A person against whom an involuntary petition has been filed is entitled to have a trial by jury in respect to the question of his insolvency, except as in the act otherwise provided, and in respect to any act of bankruptcy alleged to have been committed, but he must promptly avail himself of the right, or it will be deemed waived.

The trustee may, pursuant to the direction of the court, submit to arbitration any controversy arising in the settlement of the estate. Three arbitrators shall be chosen by mutual consent, or one by the trustee, one by the other party to the controversy, and the third by the two so chosen; or if they fail to agree in five days after their appointment, the court shall appoint the third arbitrator. A written finding of the arbitrators, or a majority of them, shall be filed in court and shall have like force and effect as the verdict of a jury.

A court of bankruptcy may require any designated person (including the bankrupt), who is a competent witness under the laws of the State in which the proceedings are pending, to appear in court or before a referee or the judge of any State court, to be examined concerning the acts, conduct, or property of a bankrupt whose estate is in process of administration.

After a person has been adjudged a bankrupt the judge may cause the trustee to proceed with the administration of the estate, or refer it generally to a referee or, specially, with only limited authority to act in the premises, or to consider a report in specific issued.

A case may be transferred from one referee to another.

Courts of bankruptcy may designate a newspaper, or in particular cases two newspapers, in which necessary notices and orders shall be published.

OFFENSES AND PUNISHMENT THEREOF.

A person shall be punished, by imprisonment for a period not to exceed five years, upon conviction of the offense of having knowingly and fraudulently appropriated to his own use, embezzled, spent, or unlawfully transferred any property, or secreted or destroyed any document belonging to a bankrupt estate which came into his charge as trustee.

A person shall be punished, by imprisonment for a period not to exceed two years, upon conviction of the offense of having knowingly and fraudulently (1) concealed while a bankrupt, or after his discharge, from his trustee any of the property belonging to his estate in bankruptcy; or (2) made a false oath or account in, or in relation to, any proceeding in bankruptcy; (3) presented under oath any false claim for proof against the estate of a bankrupt, or used any such claim in composition personally or by agent, proxy, or attorney, or as agent, proxy, or attorney; or (4) received any material amount of property from a bankrupt after the filing of the petition, with intent to defeat this act; or (5) extorted or attempted to extort any money or property from any person as a consideration for acting or forbearing to act in bankruptcy proceedings.

A person shall be punished by fine, not to exceed five hundred dollars, and forfeit his office, and the same shall thereupon become vacant, upon conviction of the offense of having knowingly (1) acted as a referee in a case in which he is directly or indirectly interested; or (2) purchased, while a referee, directly or indirectly, any property of the estate in bankruptcy of which he is referee; or (3) refused, while a referee or trustee, to permit a reasonable opportunity for the inspection of the accounts relating to the affairs of, and the papers and records of, estates in his charge by parties in interest when directed by the court so to do.

A person shall not be prosecuted for any offense arising under this act unless the indictment is found or the information is filed in court within one year after the commission of the offense.

REFEREES.

Courts of bankruptcy must appoint referees, each for a term of two years. There must be at least one in each county.

Referees must not fill any office of profit or emolument under the laws of the United States or any State other than commissioner of deeds, justice of the peace, master in chancery, or notary public; must not be related, unless very distantly, to any of the judges of the courts of bankruptcy or Circuit Courts of the United States, or any of the justices or judges of the Appellate Courts of the districts wherein they may be appointed; and they must be residents of, or have their offices in, the territorial districts for which they are appointed.

Subject to review by the judge, they shall consider all petitions referred to them by the clerks, and make adjudications or dismiss the petitions, administer oaths, examine witnesses, employ stenographers, and require the production of documents and proceedings before them; and generally exercise many of the powers of the judge in order to lighten the labors of the court itself.

Referees shall (1) declare dividends and prepare and deliver to trustees dividend sheets showing the dividends declared and to whom payable; (2) examine all schedules of property and lists of creditors filed by bankrupts and cause such as are incomplete or defective to be amended; (3) furnish such information concerning the estates in process of administration before them as may be requested by the parties in interest; (4) give notices to creditors as herein provided; (5) make up records embodying the evidence, or the substance thereof, as agreed upon by the parties in all contested matters arising before them, whenever requested to do so by either of the parties thereto, together with their findings therein, and transmit them to the judges; (6) prepare and file the schedules of property and lists of creditors required to be filed by the bankrupts, or cause the same to be done, when the bankrupts fail, refuse, or neglect to do so; (7) safely keep, perfect, and transmit to the clerks the records herein required to be kept by them, when the cases are concluded; (8) transmit to the clerks such papers as may be on file before them whenever the same are needed in any proceedings in courts, and in like manner secure the return of such papers after they have been used, or, if it be impracticable to transmit the original papers, transmit certified copies thereof by mail; (9) upon application of any party in interest, preserve the evidence taken or the substance thereof as agreed upon by the parties before them when a stenographer is not in attendance; and (10) whenever their respective offices are in the same cities or towns where the courts of bankruptcy convene, call upon and receive from the clerks all papers filed in courts of bankruptcy which have been referred to them.

Referees shall not (1) act in cases in which they are directly or indirectly interested; (2) practice as attorneys and counselors-at-law in any bankruptcy proceedings; or (3) purchase, directly or indirectly, any property of an estate in bankruptcy.

Compensation of Referees.—Referees shall receive as full compensation for their services, payable after they are rendered, a fee of ten dollars deposited with the clerk at the time the petition is filed in each case, except when a fee is not required from a voluntary bankrupt, and from estates which have been administered before them one per centum commissions on sums to be paid as dividends and commissions, or one-half of one per centum on the amount to be paid to creditors upon the confirmation of a composition.

Contempts before Referees.—A person shall not, in proceedings before a referee, (1) disobey or resist any lawful order, process, or writ; (2) misbehave during a hearing or so near the place thereof as to obstruct the same; (3) neglect to produce, after having been ordered to do so, any pertinent document; or (4) refuse to appear after having been subpœnaed, or, upon appearing, refuse to take the oath as a witness, or, after having taken the oath, refuse to be examined according to law: Provided, That no person shall be required to attend as a witness before a referee at a place outside of the State of his residence, and more than one hundred miles from such place of residence, and only in case his lawful mileage and fee for one day's attendance shall be first paid or tendered to him.

The referee shall certify the facts to the judge, if any person shall do any of the things forbidden in this section. The judge shall thereupon, in a summary manner, hear the evidence as to the acts complained of, and, if it is such as to warrant him in so doing, punish such person in the same manner and to the same extent as for a contempt committed before the court of bankruptcy, or commit such person upon the same conditions as if the doing of the forbidden act had occurred with reference to the process of, or in the presence of, the court.

TRUSTEES.

The creditors of a bankrupt estate shall at their first meeing after adjudication (that is, after the finding by the court that the party is a bankrupt), or after a vacancy has occurred in the office of a trustee, or after an estate has been reopened, or after a composition has been set aside or a discharge revoked, appoint one trustee or three trustees for each estate.

If the creditors do not appoint a trustee or trustees, the court shall do so.

Trustees may be (1) individuals who are respectively competent to perform the duties of that office, and reside or have an office within the judicial district within which they are appointed, or (2) corporations authorized by their charters or by law to act in such capacity, and having an office in such judicial district.

Duties.—Trustees shall respectively (1) account for and pay over to the estates under their control all interest received by them upon property of such estates; (2) collect and reduce to money the property of the estates for which they are trustees, under the direction of the court, and close up the estate as expeditiously as is compatible with the best interests of the parties in interest; (3) deposit all money received by them in one of the designated depositories; (4) disburse money only by check or draft on the depositories in which it has been deposited; (5) furnish such information concerning the estates of which they are trustees and their administration as may be requested by parties in interest; (6) keep regular accounts showing all amounts received and from what sources and all amounts expended and on what accounts; (7) lay before the final meeting of the creditors detailed statements of the administration of the estates; (8) make final reports and file final accounts with the courts fifteen days before the days fixed for the final meetings of the creditors; (9) pay dividends within ten days after they are declared by the referees; (10) report to the courts, in writing, the condition of the estates and the amounts of money on hand, and such other details as may be required by the courts, within the first month after their appointment and every two months thereafter, unless otherwise ordered by the courts; and (11) set apart the bankrupt's exemptions and report the items and estimated value thereof to the court as soon as practicable after their appointment.

Whenever three trustees have been appointed for an estate, the concurrence of at least two of them shall be necessary to the validity of their every act concerning the administration of the estate.

Compensation.—Trustees usually receive $5, paid at the time the original petition is filed, and in addition are entitled, from estates which they have administered, to such commissions as the court shall allow, not exceeding three per centum on the first $5,000, two per centum on the second $5,000, and one per centum on sums in excess of $10,000.

BONDS OF REFEREES AND TRUSTEES.

Both referees and trustees must give bond conditioned for the faithful performance of their duties, with at least two sureties to be approved by the court, the former in an amount not exceeding $5,000, to be fixed by the court, and the latter in such sum as the creditors shall determine.

CLERKS AND MARSHALS.

Clerks and United States marshals usually receive from the estate $10 at the commencement of the proceedings, and in addition such fees as are allowed by law for whatever services they perform in each case.

APPRAISEMENT AND SALE.

All real and personal property belonging to bankrupt estates shall be appraised by three disinterested appraisers; they shall be appointed by, and report to, the court. Real and personal property shall, when practicable, be sold subject to the approval of the court, it shall not be sold otherwise than subject to the approval of the court for less than seventy-five per centum of its appraised value.

DEBTS WHICH HAVE PRIORITY.

United States, State, county, district, and municipal taxes are payable under order of court in advance of payments of dividends to creditors.

Other debts having priority, and to be paid in full out of the bankrupt estate, and the order of payments are, (1) the actual and necessary cost of preserving the estate subsequent to filing the petition; (2) the filing fees paid by creditors in involuntary cases; (3) the cost of administration, including fees and mileage due witnesses, and one reasonable attorney's fee; (4) wages due to workmen, clerks, or servants earned within three months before the date of commencement of proceedings, not to exceed $300 to each claimant; (5) debts owing to any person who by the laws of the States, or the United States, is entitled to priority.

In the event of the confirmation of a composition being set aside, or a discharge revoked, the property acquired by the bankrupt in addition to his estate at the time the composition was confirmed, or the adjudication was made, shall be applied to the payment in full of the claims of creditors for property sold to him on credit, in good faith, while such composition or discharge was in force, and the residue, if any, shall be applied to the payment of the debts which were owing at the time of the adjudication.

Expenses.—Expenses incurred in the administration of estates shall, except where other provisions are made for their payment, be reported in detail, under oath, and examined and approved or disapproved by the court. If approved, they shall be paid or allowed out of the estates in which they were incurred.

DIVIDENDS.

A dividend of at least five per centum shall be paid within 30 days from the time the party is adjudged a bankrupt if the funds on hand will permit it; other dividends of ten per centum or more shall be subsequently paid as promptly as possible, but the court may order smaller dividends if deemed desirable.

Dividends which remain unclaimed for six months after the final dividend has been declared shall be paid by the trustee into court, and if remaining unclaimed for one year shall, under the direction of the court, be distributed to the other creditors, but minors may have one year after arriving at majority to claim such dividends.

LIENS.

A lien created by or obtained in or pursuant to any suit or proceeding at law or in equity, including an attachment upon mesne process or a judgment by confession, which was begun against a person within four months before the filing of a petition in bankruptcy by or against such person, shall be dissolved by the adjudication of such person to be a bankrupt if (1) it appears that said lien was obtained and permitted while the defendant was insolvent and that its existence and enforcement will work a preference, or (2) the party or parties to be benefited thereby had reasonable cause to believe the defendant was insolvent and in contemplation of bankruptcy, or (3) that such lien was sought and permitted in fraud of the provisions of the bankruptcy act.

All conveyances, transfers, assignments, or incumbrances of his property, or any part thereof, made or given by a person adjudged a bankrupt, and within four months prior to the filing of the petition, with the intent and purpose on his part to hinder, delay, or defraud his creditors, or any of them, shall be null and void as against the creditors of such debtor, except as to purchasers in good faith and for a present fair consideration; and all property of the debtor conveyed, transferred, assigned, or encumbered as aforesaid shall, if he be adjudged a bankrupt, and the same is not exempt from execution and liability for debts by the law of his domicile, be and remain a part of the assets and estate of the bankrupt and shall pass to his said trustee, whose duty it shall be to recover and reclaim the same by legal proceedings or otherwise for the benefit of the creditors. And all conveyances, transfers, or incumbrances of his property made by a debtor at any time within four months prior to the filing of the petition against him, and while insolvent, which are held null and void as against the creditors of such debtor by the laws of the State, Territory, or district in which such property is situate, shall be deemed null and void under this act against the creditors of such debtor if he be adjudged a bankrupt, and such property shall pass to the assignee and be by him reclaimed and recovered for the benefit of the creditors of the bankrupt.

All levies, judgments, attachments, or other liens, obtained through legal proceedings against a person who is insolvent, at any time within four months prior to the filing of a petition in bankruptcy against him, shall be deemed null and void in case he is adjudged a bankrupt, and the property affected by the levy, judgment, attachment, and other lien shall be deemed wholly discharged and released from the same and shall pass to the trustee as a part of the estate of the bankrupt, unless the court shall, on due notice, order that the right under such levy, judgment, attachment, or other lien shall be preserved for the benefit of the estate; and thereupon the same may pass to and shall be preserved by the trustee for the benefit of the estate as aforesaid, and the court may order such conveyance as shall be necessary to carry the purposes of this section into effect: Provided, that nothing herein contained shall have the effect to destroy or impair the title obtained by such levy, judgment, attachment, or other lien, of a bona fide purchaser for value who shall have acquired the same without notice or reasonable cause for inquiry.

MISCELLANEOUS PROVISIONS.

Set-off.—A set-off or counter-claim shall not be allowed in favor of any debtor of the bankrupt which was purchased by or transferred to him after the filing of the petition, or within four months before such filing, with a view to such use and with knowledge or notice that such bankrupt was insolvent or had committed an act of bankruptcy.

Exemptions.—The bankrupt law does not affect the allowance to bankrupts of the exemptions which are prescribed by the State laws in force, at the time of the filing of the petition to have said person adjudged a bankrupt, in the State wherein they had their domicile for six months or the greater portion immediately preceding the filing of the petition.

Widows.—In case of the death of the bankrupt, the widow and children shall be entitled to all rights of dower and allowances fixed by the laws of the State of the bankrupt's residence.

Depositories.—Courts of bankruptcy shall designate banking institutions as depositories for the money of bankrupt estates as convenient as may be to the residences of trustees and require bonds from them.

Patents, etc.—Interests in patents, patent-rights, copyrights, and trade-marks are included amongst the assets of a bankrupt's estate.

Life Insurance.—A bankrupt having an insurance policy with a cash surrender value, payable to himself, his estate or personal representatives, may, within 30 days after the cash surrender value has been ascertained and stated to the trustee by the company issuing the same, pay or secure to the trustee the sum so ascertained and stated, and continue to own, hold, and carry such policy free from the claims of creditors participating in the distribution of his estate under the bankruptcy proceedings, otherwise the policy shall pass to the trustee as assets.

Right to Damage.—Rights of action arising upon contracts or from the unlawful taking or detention of or injury to a bankrupt's property are included in the assets of the estate.

ASSIGNMENT AND INSOLVENCY
In the United States, Territories, Etc.

The United States bankruptcy act of July 1st, 1898, has rendered the several State laws, relating to assignment and insolvency, inoperative in so far as it may conflict with them, but no further. The authority of Congress, under the Constitution of the United States, is paramount in the matter of enactment of uniform bankruptcy laws for the whole country. It should be particularly observed that the bankruptcy law does not apply in all cases or under all circumstances.—For information on this subject see title "The Bankruptcy Law," in this book.

ALABAMA.

No insolvent law.

Assignments.—If debtor seeks by confessing judgment, or through an attachment, to give unlawful preference, this operates as a general assignment. So also preference cannot be given in the assignment itself. Creditor can require trustee to give bond.

ARIZONA.

In assignments, claims must be presented within six months from publication of notices. No preferences permitted.

ARKANSAS.

Insolvent law.—Debtor may ask to be declared insolvent and turn over property to receiver, excepting what is exempted. Receiver may contest any attachment issued ten days before debtor files his application. After settlement debtor released of his debts. Wages and salaries for three months preferred. No other preferences among creditors.

Assignments may be made with preferences. Must be contested, if at all, within six months. If set aside it becomes an assignment for all creditors pro rata. Assignee gives bond. Insolvent corporations cannot prefer.

The court orders the sheriff into possession until creditors appoint an assignee, not less than thirty days after published date of order. Preferences not allowed. Dividends declared from time to time on all proven claims. Assignee gives bond with two sureties. Involuntary insolvency is by petition of not less than five creditors with claims aggregating not less than $500, and verified by at least three petitioners showing fraudulent intentions or acts, or (unsatisfied) legal process for four days, or suspension of payments for forty days. If petition is granted, proceedings same as involuntary insolvency. Discharge, except in case of corporations, may be obtained after three months from time of adjudication. Any creditor may oppose discharge, and have issue tried by jury. Fraud punished by imprisonment.

Assignor may obtain discharge from debts.

CONNECTICUT.

Any creditor having a claim for $100 or over, founded on a contract, may cause a writ of attachment to issue. The officer returns he can find no property to attach, and then the creditor brings a petition to the Court of Probate asking for the appointment of a trustee to take charge of the debtor's estate. The trustee sells the property and pays the creditors pro rata. The debtor obtains no discharge unless he pays 70 per cent. The debtor can also make a voluntary assignment, and the trustee acts the same as in an involuntary case. No preferences.

DELAWARE.

Assignments must be for all creditors alike. Debtor is not discharged from his obligations except as far as paid. Debtor before assignment may prefer creditors by confessed judgment or otherwise, but the debt must be bona fide.

Insolvent laws.—Practically obsolete.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Assignments.—All debts must be paid pro rata. List of debts, also of assets, must be attached to assignment. Assignee must reside in district.

No insolvent law applies in the district except the national bankruptcy act. See title "The Bankruptcy Law," in this book.

FLORIDA.

Assignment.—Distribution must be proportional to amount of claims. Exempt property reserved to assignor. No insolvent law.

GEORGIA.

Assignments may prefer creditors, but a corporation may prefer only creditors entitled to priority under the general laws of the State. A levy made under attachment, before assignment, will stand. Assignor and assignee must make complete list of property, and assignor must make affidavit of its completeness. If one who is insolvent purchases goods, without intending to pay for them, the vendor may annul the sale and recover the goods, if no innocent third party has acquired rights therein. An insolvent corporation, or trader, not paying a debt at maturity is liable to have his property placed in the hands of a receiver on petition of creditors representing one-third or more of unsecured debt. By trader is meant one who does business, buys and sells realty or personalty of any kind, a banker, broker, or commission merchant, or one manufacturing $5,000 worth of goods or more per annum. No preferences allowed after application for receiver. Court may discharge debtor from his debts, but this is not usually done.

IDAHO.

Insolvent debtor may apply to court, surrender all he owns to the sheriff till appointment of an assignee to take charge (reserving for himself what is exempt from execution). The creditors elect the assignee. The debtor may be discharged from debts of residents of the State; also of non-residents who present their claims.

ILLINOIS.

Assignments.—Assignee must send notice to each creditor to present his claim under oath within three months. If not so presented the claim is deferred to those of creditors who comply. Assignee must render final account within a year, but dividend may be ordered meantime by the court. Claims filed must be under oath. The trustee or a creditor may cause the arrest of assignor or person to whom a fraudulent transfer of property has been made, and subject him to examination in court. Dividend may be compelled when assets on hand sufficient to pay ten per cent. Creditors representing half of the liabilities may cause removal of trustee. To be effective deed of assignment must be recorded.

INDIAN TERRITORY.

Assignee must sell property at public sale within 120 days after giving bond.

Insolvent law applies only to releasing persons imprisoned for certain causes.

IOWA.

Assignments must be for the benefit of all the creditors. No preferences permitted in assignment. Property exempt from execution may be reserved. Assignee must notify all creditors known to him to present claims under oath within three months, at the end of which time he must file list of creditors so presenting claims, and within three months thereafter interested parties may file objections to any claim. Assignment does not effect a discharge from debts. Taxes and wages not exceeding one hundred dollars to any employee for work done within ninety days preceding the assignment are preferred.

KANSAS.

All creditors participate in proportion to amounts of claims. They are entitled to notice by advertisement and also by letter, so far as their addresses are known, of time and place of adjusting and allowing demands. The enactment of the bankruptcy law practically avoids the State assignment law. No insolvent law in this State; only a discharge of claims after United States bankrupt proceedings.

KENTUCKY.

Assignments are for the benefit of all creditors. Exempt property does not pass by the deed. Preferences made within six months before assignment are void, and assignee is authorized to recover property transferred in fraud of creditors.

Creditors living out of the county are entitled to notice by mail. Claims must be probated, and if not properly presented are deemed waived unless the court order otherwise.

LOUISIANA.

A debtor may ask his creditors for a respite, and a majority may grant such, not exceeding three years.

Should this be refused, surrender follows; but preference to any creditor is void.

The debtor obtains a discharge from his debts upon surrender of his property, and all creditors proving their debts, and accepting a dividend, are barred from further proceedings for the balance, but the debtor is debarred from this right if he has given an unjust preference within three months before surrender.

A creditor who has issued execution and found no property thereon may force a surrender.

MAINE.

A debtor owing over $300 may apply for benefit of insolvent act by paying $25 into Insolvent Court with his petition.

When one or more creditors make oath as to their belief in the insolvency of a debtor, and that they believe their aggregate debts amount to more than one-fourth part of the debts provable against a debtor, the judge shall declare him insolvent, if such allegations are proved.

An assignee is chosen at the first meeting of creditors, such choice being made by a majority in number and value of the unsecured creditors present in person or by attorney. If no choice made the court appoints; and in the interval between the declaration of insolvency of debtor and choice of assignee by creditors the court messenger shall hold the estate of debtor.

An assignee may recover any money paid a creditor on writ, judgment or execution, when such payment is made within four months prior to commencement of insolvency proceedings, when such money is received as a preference, and known at the time that debtor is insolvent.

A discharge shall not be granted if debtor has sworn falsely, concealed assets, or otherwise fraudulently acted.

A discharge may be granted any time after four months from the time of issuing the warrant of insolvency.

Should debtor at first meeting produce an agreement, signed by a majority of the creditors, representing three-fourths of his indebtedness, agreeing to accept a certain percentage, the judge shall grant a discharge when debtor has paid or secured such percentage.

Creditors out of the State, who have not proved their claims, are not affected.

MARYLAND.

Deeds of trust for the benefit of creditors may be made if not to burden, delay, or defraud creditors. No preferences allowed.

MASSACHUSETTS.

Debtor may assign all his property, reserving what is exempt, and if a majority (in number and amount of claims) of the creditors who are unsecured and not privileged under the law assent in writing, the assignment will be valid. Those assenting will share to the exclusion of those not assenting, unless the instrument expressly makes the assignment for the benefit of all creditors. The assignment may be superseded any time within six months, however, by the institution of insolvency proceedings under the State laws. Known creditors are entitled to notice by mail.

A State insolvency law is in force so far as not superseded by the United States bankruptcy act of 1898. It enables a debtor, making an honest surrender of his property, to obtain a discharge from his debts, or to effect a compromise with all creditors with the consent of three-fourths of them in number and amount of claims.

MICHIGAN.

Assignments for creditors must contain no preferences. Property exempt from execution is allowed the debtor. Claims must be proved by affidavit, showing the consideration for the debt, when contracted, when due, all payments on account, and what collateral is held therefor.

MINNESOTA.

Exempt property excluded from the assignment. Attachment or levy becomes dissolved by an assignment made within ten days thereafter. Complete schedule of debts must be filed by assignor. Known creditors must have notice by mail. Claims must be itemized, verified, and filed within time fixed by court. If debtor does not assign in such manner and at such time as to prevent parties from obtaining preferences, creditors may have receiver appointed. All payments and transfers made within ninety days before assignment or receivership to those having reason to believe debtor insolvent may be set aside. Taxes and $50 wages owing any person earned within ninety days preceding assignment, or receivership, are preferred by law.

Debtor may be discharged only from claims proven or participating in the distribution. Secured creditors must exhaust security before participating in general assets.

MISSISSIPPI.

Assignment act of 1892 compels assignee to file petition and bond in twenty-four hours. He then becomes an officer of the court for the purpose of the assignment. Preferences are allowed, and creditors may attack by cross-petition.

MISSOURI.

No insolvent law.

Assignments.—No preferences allowed. Not more than one month after allowance of claims a dividend must be paid and thereafter as often as funds on hand warrant a dividend of five per cent. State taxes and wages accrued within six months, not exceeding $100 to each employee, have priority. Debts are not discharged unless paid in full.

MONTANA.

No insolvent law.

Insolvent debtors may make assignments and prefer creditors, but the preference must be absolute and without power of revocation. Wages for sixty days preceding assignment, not exceeding $200, have priority to all other claims.

The debt is not discharged; creditors to be bound must be notified. Fraudulent proceedings subject the debtor to imprisonment till he makes full surrender.

NEBRASKA.

Sheriff takes charge of assigned estates in the first place. Subsequently creditors meet and choose an assignee, and notice of meeting must be given creditors. Claims must be filed by a day fixed, or be barred. Debtor must file statement giving particulars as to assets and liabilities. Only property exempt from execution can be reserved. Within three months after date of inventory court orders distribution of funds on hand. No preferences allowed unless it be for $100 or less for wages. Transfers made in contemplation of insolvency within thirty days before making the assignment to a person having cause to believe the assignor insolvent are void. So also are preferences to creditors with like intent within the thirty days.

NEVADA.

Insolvent debtor, owing $500 or more, residing one year in any county, may make assignment. Creditors choose assignee, or on their failure, the court appoints the sheriff. To secure a discharged debtor's property surrender must equal fifty per cent. of debts unless three-fourths in number and one-half in amount of creditors consent. No discharge granted where fraud proven. Partners and corporations may be driven into involuntary insolvency on petition of five creditors, residents of the State, whose claims reach $500.

NEW HAMPSHIRE.

No preferences allowed, and assignment must include the whole estate of assignor. A composition will be allowed, three-fourths of the creditors in number and amount of claims consenting (claims to exceed $50 each), and the judge of probate also consenting, thus effecting a discharge from debts. A creditor may dissent, take no benefit under the assignment, and still hold his claim.

NEW JERSEY.

Assignment must be of all the debtor's estate without preference. Judgment confessed to give a preference will not be preferred. The assignee gives public notice to creditors to file and prove claims within three months. Those not filed within three months after the assignment, may become barred of a dividend. Goods and chattels to the value of $200 and wearing apparel shall be reserved from estate of one having a family. Wages not exceeding $300 to one person have priority. Rent for one year is preferred out of proceeds of personalty on property leased. Claims presented will be discharged; others will not.

NEW MEXICO.

Debtor may make a voluntary assignment of all his property, resulting in a distribution pro rata among the creditors, or the court will, on application of adverse parties, appoint an assignee if application thereof is made within six months after any sale, mortgage or transfer made by the debtor or judgment suffered or act done by him in contemplation of insolvency with design to prefer one or more creditors. No preferences are allowed in any case, but the debtor is allowed property exempt from execution. He is not discharged from debts not fully paid upon distribution of the assets.

NEW YORK.

Wages and salaries earned within a year prior to assignment are preferred, and preferences to creditors may be given with respect to one-third of the balance of the estate, but assigning partnerships and corporations can make no preferences. After one year from date of assignment a creditor may compel assignee to account. Assignor is not discharged from unpaid portions of his debts.

NORTH CAROLINA.

Insolvent debtors, in order to obtain a discharge, must file a petition and full schedule of property and debts, when a trustee will be appointed to hold the property for the benefit of creditors. The debtor is then entitled to a personal discharge.

Assignments.—Debtors may make preferences, but within five days after making assignment assignor must file statement containing list of preferred creditors, amount due each, when contracted, and consideration therefor, otherwise the deed is invalid. Assignee must file account every three months, and his final account within twelve months, unless good cause be shown to the contrary. Claims must be probated and filed.

NORTH DAKOTA.

An assignment in good faith may be made in trust for creditors.

An insolvent cannot give a preference to one or more of his creditors.

An insolvent debtor owing $500 or more may take the benefit of the insolvent law and become discharged from his debts, if he has acted fairly and honestly, upon surrendering all but his exempt property. The court directs notice to be given all creditors.

Any person owing $500 or more acting fraudulently, seeking to escape creditors, or committing acts designed to prefer creditors contrary to the insolvent law of the State, or, while insolvent, suffering an execution of $500 or more to be returned unsatisfied, or, if a merchant, suspending payment for thirty days or more of commercial paper, may be driven into involuntary insolvency by creditors having claims amounting to $400 or more. Notice is given to creditors and they choose an assignee. All levies under any process made within sixty days before proceedings are commenced are dissolved, and any transfers to defraud creditors made within thirty days are void, and no judgment will be a lien if suit was commenced within six months and entered within thirty days before proceedings are commenced. Debtor may be discharged from debts if he has practiced no frauds. Life insurance is not included in the insolvent estate.

OHIO.

Assignor retains property exempt from execution, unless waived in the assignment. Court may order business to be carried on on application of three-fourths of the creditors. Claims must be probated and filed within six months after assignment. Taxes on personal property, wages earned within twelve months prior to assignment not exceeding $300, are preferred, but not to the prejudice of a lien. Debtor is not discharged from his debts so far as unpaid. A debtor may, in good faith, prefer a creditor before assignment.

OKLAHOMA.

Must be no preferences in assignments, though bona fide creditors may be preferred before assignment.

OREGON.

An assignment by one insolvent is not good if it contains preferences. The assignment dissolves all attachments on which judgment has not been obtained. The creditors may select the assignee. Debtor may be discharged from his debts if his estate has paid fifty per cent.

PENNSYLVANIA.

Assignment without preferences may be made of all or part of one's estate, but it will not work a discharge from unpaid portions of debts. Bona fide creditors may be preferred before assignment. Debtor may reserve $300 worth of his property, or waive his right to it. Certain taxes are preferred, as are also wages earned within six months not amounting to over $200 in any one case. Distribution of personalty proceeds is then to all creditors pro rata; likewise as to realty proceeds after lien creditors are satisfied. Levies and attachments of personalty before the assignment hold good. Assignee may be required to file an account after one year, or show cause why he should not. Distribution is by an auditor appointed by court after the account is confirmed, and claims must be presented to the auditor.

RHODE ISLAND.

Insolvent laws still appear in the statutes of the State, but are practically null and void since the passage of the National Bankrupt Act. A debtor has a right to make a common law assignment or trust deed, but on doing so it is an act of bankruptcy, and he can be put into bankruptcy at once. Under the old law the creditors chose the assignee. Claims had to be probated and filed. The court could order a composition with creditors under certain circumstances, and discharge debtor. Taxes and wages not over $100 and earned within six months were preferred. The insolvent had to owe $300 or over, and had to petition the court for relief and discharge from debts, or creditors representing one-fourth of his debts could institute insolvency proceedings, if he had assigned for the benefit of his creditors, or taken steps to defraud.

SOUTH CAROLINA.

Assignments giving preferences are void, and all conveyances, mortgages, etc., within ninety days before assignment, are void unless made for present consideration. Creditors proving their claims before the assignee, and executing releases in full of their claims, are entitled to entire assets, if required to pay them in full. If anything remains, other creditors take it pro rata.

SOUTH DAKOTA.

Insolvent debtor may assign, reserving property exempt. Preferences are forbidden.

TENNESSEE.

In a general assignment no preferences are allowed. A conveyance or a judgment confessed within three months before assignment and in contemplation thereof is void. Debtor must file, under oath, schedule of assets. Attachment or execution levied on property before recording assignment is good.

By a special assignment, as by deed of trust, a debtor may secure one or more of his creditors.

A foreign general assignment, without registration in the State, will not avail against a subsequent attachment.

TEXAS.

Insolvent debtors may transfer all their property, reserving that exempted by law, but this will not discharge them from unpaid portions of their debts.

Also, an assignment may be made to benefit only such creditors as release the assignor from further liability, provided the assignee pays at least one-third of their claims. Accepting creditors must give notice of willingness to release within four months unless they did not know of assignment, and must file probated claims. When funds permit it, dividends of 10 per cent. must be paid.

UTAH.

Any creditor or creditors may be preferred. Joint, or joint and several, debtors can prefer joint creditors only from joint property, and can prefer individual creditors only out of separate property. The deed must reserve no benefits to the assignor, but exempt property and life insurance will not be transferred by it unless the contrary intention be expressed. Creditors are entitled to notice by mail. Claims must be probated and filed.

VERMONT.

An inhabitant contracting and owing debts over $300 may petition court stating his inability to pay and his desire to assign. The creditors elect the assignee or the judge appoints. Known creditors are entitled to notice by mail to prove claims and elect assignee. Claims not filed within six months after debtor is adjudged insolvent are barred.

Creditors having claims of $250 or more may force the debtor into involuntary bankruptcy. Preferences within four months before filing petition are set aside. Debts and taxes due the United States and the State, not exceeding $50, for services performed within six months before adjudication of insolvency, have priority. Discharges from debts are granted only where the estate pays 30 per cent. or more, unless a majority in number and amount of creditors assent. Corporations are not discharged.

VIRGINIA.

Assignments may contain preferences without limit.

WASHINGTON.

Where the assignment is honest, the debtor may be discharged from all prior indebtedness. Property exempt from levy by execution or attachment may be retained by the assignor.

WEST VIRGINIA.

An insolvent debtor may not make preferences, yet creditors must take steps to resist them in order to prevent them becoming operative.

WISCONSIN.

Preferences in assignments are void, as also are preferences sought to be effected within sixty days prior to assignment and in contemplation thereof. Claims must be filed within three months from time notice is given. Assignee must mail notice to creditors.

If insolvent debtor's property is attached or levied upon, he may within ten days assign all his property not exempt for all creditors, whereupon such levies, etc., will be dissolved. An insolvent debtor seeking to prefer creditors may be driven into bankruptcy by other creditors, a receiver taking charge of all except exempt property.

WYOMING.

Any person may assign all his property for his creditors. Any attachment or execution, payment or transfer within twenty days of assignment is void if the party to be benefited had reasonable cause to believe the party insolvent. Wages for three months before assignment have priority.

EXEMPTION OF PROPERTY FROM SALE, ETC.,
In the United States, Territories, Etc.

Exemption is the right of a Debtor to retain a certain amount of property without its being liable to attachment, distress or execution, or any other process at the suit of a Creditor.

A judgment creates no lien upon property exempt from execution, etc., and execution creates no power over it. (21 Illinois, p. 105; 14 Ben. Monroe, p. 475.) It is placed beyond the reach of the law, in the absolute control of its Owner. The law will take cognizance of it only for the purpose of protecting the Owner in its enjoyment. (40 Mississippi, p. 49.)

Property exempt before the death of a Debtor continues exempt afterward in favor of his Widow and Children. (47 Barbour, 7, 479.)

If husband and child, one-third to husband, two-thirds to child. 5. If husband only, half to him, other half as if he had previously died. 6. If father, mother, brothers and sisters, equally to all, and excluding grandfather and grandmother.

QUEBEC.

Both legal and conventional dower exists. Descent is—1. To children. 2. If no issue, descendants take half, and their brothers and sisters the other half. 3. Husband and wife do not inherit from each other, till beyond the twelfth degree of relatives.

NOVA SCOTIA.

Realty descends equally to children and their descendants. If no issue, half to father and half to widow in lieu of dower. If no father or issue, half to widow and half to mother, brothers and sisters and children of such by representation. If no widow, whole to mother, brothers and sisters and their children. If none such, to next of kin. Half-blood inherits equally with whole-blood. Widow takes one-third of personalty; balance distributed to others the same as realty. If no widow, others get all of personalty. Posthumous children inherit. Widow's dower is a third interest in husband's realty.

NORTHWEST TERRITORY.

No dower. Realty and personalty descend alike. 1. If intestate leave widow, and issue or descendant of such, widow takes a third, balance to issue equally; if no issue, she takes half, the remaining half to intestate's father. 2. If no widow nor issue, all to father. 3. If no father, to mother, brothers and sisters of intestate in equal parts, subject to widow's right to a half, as above.

Of Justices.—Much ancient and interesting history surrounds the title "Justice of the Peace;" and the function of the office, while for the most part experiencing little real change for centuries, has found administration under different titular names, though not widely variant in meaning. The title "Justice of the Peace" is of great antiquity. Before the time of Edward III. the title was "Conservator of the Peace," but by a law of that reign they were given the power to try felonies, after which they acquired the more honorable appellation of "Justices;" not in the abstract sense of "Judge," or of general "judicial officer," but as magistrate of a local court of limited jurisdiction, and one not of record. "Justices of the Peace" constituted the minor judiciary of England by special commission under the great seal to keep the peace in the county for which they were appointed. Said Lord Coke: "The whole Christian world had not the like office as justice of the peace, if duly executed."

With but little, if any, change in the function of the office, justices of the peace have, in many places, and under certain regulations of the minor judiciary, come to be designated as "Magistrates." When the word "magistrate" is used without qualification, in almost any State of the United States it implies a minor local justice, or justice of the peace; and even with such qualification as police magistrate and committing magistrate, as in many of our cities; or district magistrate, as in India; or stipendiary magistrate, as in England; its meaning and function are not radically changed. Of course this limited use of the word "magistrate" is outside of that general, comprehensive use, as when we speak of presidents, governors, mayors, prefects, etc., as chief magistrates of nations, States or cities.

The good old Saxon word Alderman (elderman) originally implied a chieftain, lord or earl. It afterwards came to signify the chief magistrate of a territorial district, as of a county or province, and also the chief officer of a gild, and was therefore suggestive of a function quite analogous to justice of the peace, or magistrate. But this good old word deserted in a measure its primitive and rural significance, and found a welcome in the cities. In fact, it became, in the course of time, and especially in its transit to America, almost a purely urban or municipal word. In the constitution of Pennsylvania "justices and aldermen" are provided for, and in the act of assembly prescribing for the election of such "justices and aldermen," townships and boroughs shall elect justices, but "for each ward in a city shall be elected two aldermen." This was a distinction in title with scarcely any difference of function. In New York the word alderman denoted a great broadening and radical change of function. There an alderman became a member of the municipal legislative body, though still retaining certain judicial functions. And more than this, there as well as elsewhere, where the municipal legislative body consisted of two branches, the board of aldermen constituted the upper branch. This blending of function ceased, in a measure, to be popular, and aldermanic governing bodies have undergone radical changes, or been abolished. Even in Philadelphia, where an alderman was but little else than a justice, the name gave way, under the provisions of the constitution of 1874, to "magistrate," or "police magistrate," with function almost identical with [illegible] former alderman.

Esquire was an old English title [illegible] office or courtesy, meaning one [illegible] wear a shield, and next in rank to [illegible]. Courtesy extended its use to officers royal courts, sheriffs, justices of the peace, often to literary and professional men. [illegible] the United States the title, in its original abbreviated form of Esq., seems to have been largely appropriated by lawyers, but justices of the peace have been scarcely less tenacious of it under the shortened form of "Squire."

After this brief review of titles and functions, it is easy to see how comprehensive is the title "Justice," or "Justice of the Peace," and how completely it suggests the function of one of the most ancient and universally recognized of minor civic officials. The office exists in some form or other, or its functions and powers are recognized under certain conditions, in every State and Territory of the United States. By whatever title known, this official is either elective by the people, or appointive by governors or courts, and his duties, powers and, to a great extent, his practice, are prescribed by statutes of the respective States. He is expected to be a man of probity and judicial turn. He holds office under a commission. He is, as a rule, authorized to use a seal, though, owing to the expense of this, the primitive and convenient use of a scroll is accepted as a substitute.

The office is essentially a minor one, an adjunct of the county and State judicial system, a ramification, as it were, of justice, in its most popular, convenient and acceptable form, to the remotest corners of population. It is an office presumably always open, especially in rural sections, or except where the functions of justices are embodied in district, aldermanic or magistrate courts of cities or of prescribed and thickly populated sections.

The jurisdiction of justices and of justices' courts in the respective States and Territories is regulated by statute, but is so phenomenally uniform as to have almost the sanction of a common law prescription. Thus in civil suits they either have sole jurisdiction where the amounts involved are small, seldom exceeding $300, and more rarely $500, or else concurrent jurisdiction with the higher courts for like amounts. But such jurisdiction seldom embraces cases which involve questions relating to land titles. For jurisdiction of justices in actions arising from contract, see COLLECTION OF CLAIMS, DEBTS AND DEMANDS (ante).

Justices are generally given jurisdiction in actions of trespass, and of trover and conversion, and in cases of rent collections, and distraint, subject to statutory limitation as to the amount. Judgments rendered by justices are universally subject to appeal to higher tribunals, except where the amount is too trifling to warrant further suit. So the superior courts may issue writs of certiorari to justices compelling them to send up certified records of their proceedings for review and correction. When there is no appeal, execution issues upon the judgment of a justice, and levy and sale are had through a constable, the procedure being analogous to that in the higher courts through their sheriffs. Certified copies of judgments before justices may be filed in the superior courts, where they become liens on real estate as other judgments rendered in said courts, and transcripts of such judgments may be filed in the various courts throughout a State.

Justices may administer oaths, take depositions and acknowledgments, administer the marriage ceremony; but generally their acknowledgments, when for use outside of their own State, and when unaccompanied by a regularly engraved seal, must be attested by a court of record, having a seal. One of the most important of the primitive endowments of the justice of the peace was his jurisdiction in criminal affairs, and this almost universally maintains in the United States. He may issue attachments, capiases and warrants, and after arrest may hear, exact bail, and bind over for appearance at court, where the offence is a bailable one.

Of Notaries Public.—In Roman law the notary (notarius) was the person—generally a slave or freedman—who took notes of judicial proceedings in shorthand or cipher. He corresponded to a modern clerk of the court, or to a stenographer. By a singular transition and survival of titles, that of notary came, in the course of time, to be applied to the Roman official called tabellion, who drew up legal documents, and performed the general function now implied by the word scrivener. The tabellion, therefore, corresponds more nearly with the modern notary than the title notarius.

Both the name and function of notary found their most rapid development through the canon law, under which a notary became a person of wide importance. Indeed, it was a maxim of that law that the evidence of a notary was worth that of two unskilled witnesses. In most European countries he still holds something of his old position under the canon law. In France, for instance, a document attested by a notary is said to be "legalized," a term quite too strong to express the effect of such attestation in England, where the notary public, in spite of his name, is not recognized as a public official to the same extent as in some other countries.

But in more modern times it is to the needs of commerce, banking, jurisprudence and general business that the notary owes his almost universal existence and the great convenience and importance of his function. Like that of justices, the notarial function, though ascertained and regulated by statute, varies but little, especially in the United States. In brief, it is to protest bills and notes, and certify the same, administer oaths, take depositions, acknowledgments of deeds and other instruments, and to authenticate the same by his official signature and seal. It will be seen that this function, as far as it goes, is almost identical with that of a justice.

Notaries are, as a rule, created by commission, mostly, in this country, from governors of the States. They must have engraved seals of office, and give bond for good conduct. They are usually men of some business quality, as conveyancers, law students, and young practitioners, but bank presidents, directors and stockholders and persons exercising judicial office are generally, for evident reasons, not eligible to the office, at least, not preferred for it. Their terms of office are prescribed in their commissions, as well as the place, or places, where they are expected to reside and officiate.

The rule is quite general, that the official acts, protests and attestations of notaries public, when certified in due form, under their hands and seals, in respect to the dishonor of all bills and promissory notes, and of notice to drawers, acceptors or endorsers thereof, may be received and read in evidence as proof of the facts therein in suits pending in courts of justice. But there are many exceptions to this rule throughout the States, where the notary's attestation, or official act, relates to other than strictly commercial paper. Then, some of the States accept such attestation or acknowledgment, when properly sealed, as sufficient to sustain evidence in court, the seal being presumed to be prima facie genuine. Other States require that the notary's seal shall be certified by a court of record. This is especially so in some of the older States, which make large use of Commissioners of Deeds for the acknowledgment of deeds and mortgages.

Though a notary's commission may designate his residence, city or district, his jurisdiction extends throughout his State. An important function of a notary, especially in commercial and legal centres, is the taking of depositions. In this capacity he may act solely or simply as clerk for contending counsel, writing down faithfully the questions and answers, or seeing that they are so written. Banks, as a rule, select special notaries to make their protests and serve their notices. Notaries are paid by fees, which are regulated in many States by statute, and should be in all. No officials in the world are so general and so universally recognized as notaries public.

LEASES AND THEIR TERMINATION.

LANDLORD AND TENANT.

Leases of lands and tenements, or other corporial and incorporial things, their general nature, rights and duties of parties thereunder, the common law respecting their termination, and their various legal forms, are found fully treated at pages 312–333, ante. But as the statutes and local customs of the several States of the United States, and of the Provinces of Canada, give rise to a variety of procedure respecting their termination, and of the rights and duties of landlords and tenants, when it becomes necessary for the former to take legal steps to secure repossession of leased premises, it is thought proper here to indicate, for the use of business men and non-resident lawyers, a little more in detail, the laws and usages relating thereto. For a standard form of notice by landlord to tenant to terminate a lease, see Pennsylvania, Oklahoma, Connecticut, New York, District of Columbia, Indiana, etc.

Alabama.—If lease is for specified term, landlord cannot terminate it till end of term, except for violation by tenant of one or more of its covenants. Lease of land for more than a year must be in writing. If tenant does not quit at end of term, or is permitted to occupy by sufferance after term ends, without a new contract, landlord may, on six days' notice, institute proceeding to evict. If successful, the constable puts him in possession under a writ of restitution. Holding-over tenants, after possession is demanded, are liable for double rent.

Arkansas.—Where the relation of landlord and tenant exists, either by written lease to expire at a certain date, or tenancy by the month, etc., if tenant refuse to surrender possession at the end of his term, or to pay rent when the renting is by the month, or at will, or by sufferance, the landlord may bring action in unlawful detainer, after 3 days' notice to quit. Tenant then has 5 days in which to give bond and retain possession till case is tried. If no bond is given in 5 days, the officer ejects tenant and puts landlord in possession. The following form of notice accords with the statutes:

Little Rock, Ark., ———, 19—.

To John Doe:

You are hereby notified that I demand that you quit and deliver to me, or to my agent, John Smith, on or before the —— day of ——, 19—, the possession of the house and premises No. —— Arch Street, situated in Block —— in Little Rock, Arkansas.

RICHARD ROE,
by John Smith, his agent.

Arizona.—Whether for non-payment of rent for 5 days, or for any other violation of covenants by tenant, landlord may take possession of premises without formal demand, which shall be tried, without notice, before any justice of the peace in not less than 5 nor more than 30 days. In tenancy from year to year tenancy terminates at the end of each year, unless written permission is given to remain. Thirty days' notice is required to terminate a lease from month to month. When tenancy is for a definite period fixed in the lease, tenant is bound to surrender possession at end of term, and no notice to quit is necessary; but, as a rule, 10 days' notice is given. No particular form of notice required, but it should be in writing, plain, and contain a description of the property.

California.—Lease of property other than lodging or dwelling house, where there is no other usage, presumed to be for one year. Lease of lodging or dwelling houses, presumed to be for such length of time as parties agree upon to pay and receive rent. If monthly, then the lease is for a month. If no time be fixed for payment of rent, the lease is monthly. If tenant remains beyond term, and landlord accepts rent, the term is renewed, for the same time and terms, not exceeding one month if the term is monthly, nor in any case exceeding one year. Terms of leases from month to month may be changed by the landlord on fifteen days' notice, to take effect at the end of the month. If tenant continues to hold, it shall be on the conditions specified in the notice. Tenancy at will may be terminated by notice to remove within one month. Unlawful detainer by a tenant is where he continues to hold, without permission of the landlord, and after default of rent pursuant to agreement, and three days' notice in writing, requiring payment or possession. Such notice may be served at any time within one year after rent is due. In leases of agricultural lands, where tenant has held over for more than sixty days, he is entitled to hold for a full year. Assignment or subletting by a tenant contrary to lease covenants terminates a lease upon three days' notice. Notices to terminate may be served on the tenant personally, by leaving a copy at his house or place of business, by mail, or by affixing a copy on the premises.

Colorado.—Three days' notice is required to evict a tenant at will. No notice required if lease expires at a time certain. Three months' notice, if lease is from year to year. In all cases where repossession is sought for failure to pay rent, or other breach of covenant, landlord must give three days' notice, in the alternative. If the tenancy be for 6 months, one month's notice is required; if monthly, 10 days' notice. No form of notice prescribed, but it must be in writing and specific as to dates, the landlord's intent and description of property.

Connecticut.—The following notice must be given 10 days before a tenant can be compelled to leave:

I hereby give you notice that you are to quit possession of the —— now occupied by you on or before the (date 10 in the future).

I. B.

Above notice to be made in duplicate, and one served on the party.

Delaware.—Whether a tenant is occupying under a hold-over lease for one or more years, or from year to year, for less than a year, or at will, a landlord cannot terminate it without giving the tenant three months' notice in writing to remove: excepting where the lease is by the month or week, when a month's or week's notice is sufficient. No particular form of notice.

District of Columbia.—When the lease is of realty for a certain term, no notice to quit is necessary. When the tenancy is from month to month or quarter to quarter, 30 days' notice in writing to quit is required, same as to tenancy at will. Notice to quit must be served personally on the tenant, or delivered to some proper person on the premises. When a lease for any time has expired, or tenancy has been terminated by notice, and the tenant fails to quit, the landlord may bring ejectment proceedings in the supreme court, or action before a justice of the peace.

Florida.—Where tenancy is by the month, 3 days' notice is required before he can be evicted by legal proceedings. The statutes do not prescribe the length of notice required where the tenant is occupying under a lease from year to year, or is holding over, but probably one month's notice would be deemed sufficient. No particular form of notice prescribed.

Georgia.—Where tenant occupies premises from month to month without lease for a definite length of time, landlord must give tenant 60 days' notice to quit; tenant must give landlord 30 days' notice of his intention to vacate. No notice required by landlord to terminate a written lease to expire at a fixed time. This would apply to a lease from year to year. If a tenant holds premises under a lease for a year, and does not vacate at end of term, but continues to occupy without further agreement, he holds for the same period as the lease ran. Notice must be in writing, but no particular form required.

Idaho.—Wherever the right of re-entry is given to a landlord under the terms of a lease, such re-entry may be made at any time after the right accrues upon three days' notice, as provided in the civil code. Thirty days' notice must be given in order to terminate a tenancy at will, and then three days in order to secure possession. No particular form of notice prescribed.

Illinois.—Sixty days' notice in writing required to terminate a lease from year to year. It may be given at any time within four months preceding the last sixty days of the term. If the tenancy be from month to month, or for any term less than a year, and the tenant hold over without special agreement, the landlord may maintain action in forcible detainer or ejectment upon 30 days' notice in writing to tenant. In all cases where tenancy is for a fixed period the tenant is bound to quit at expiration of the period, and no notice is necessary. The required form of notice is:

You are hereby notified that the lease of your premises terminates on the —— day of ——, 19—, and you are hereby notified to quit and deliver up possession of the same to me at that time.

Indiana.—If lease be for a certain and definite time, landlord need give no notice to terminate it. It expires at the end of the term, and tenant may be evicted without notice. Where a tenant is holding over under a lease for a definite term, he is in for a term equal to the original lease, and may be evicted at the end of the term without notice. Tenancies from year to year may be terminated by three months' notice given to tenant prior to expiration of the year; and when tenancies are by consent of the parties, express or implied, or from one period to another for less than three months' duration, a notice equal to the interval between such periods is sufficient. The statutory form of notice is:

To W. B.

You are hereby notified to deliver up to me, at the expiration of the current year of the tenancy, the possession of the following described premises, situate in —— county, and State of Indiana, to wit, ——, now held of me by you as tenant.

I. R.

Indian Territory.—To terminate a lease, all that is necessary, when tenant is one at will, or from month to month, is reasonable notice in writing to deliver up the premises by a certain day, or at the expiration of the month. Usually ten days' notice is given. Tenants by the year are given thirty days' notice.

Iowa.—For non-payment of rent landlord may always terminate a lease on 3 days' written notice. Tenants holding over become tenants at will, and do not hold under the provisions of the expired lease, unless it is so provided therein. Such tenant may be evicted upon 3 days' notice to quit, if served within 30 days after expiration of the lease; otherwise it requires a 30 days' notice to quit. If the tenancy be a farm property, the lease must terminate before March 1, otherwise the tenant can hold for another year. Notice must be in writing, but no particular form prescribed.

Kansas.—If a lease provides a date for ending a term, no notice to terminate is required. Three months' notice is required to terminate a lease from year to year. Hold-over leases, with consent of landlord, become leases from year to year. In farm leases, where tenant is holding from year to year, or for any indefinite term, a three months' notice should be given fixing the termination on the 1st of March. No particular form of notice is required, but simply to recite that the undersigned, owner of the following described premises ——, hereby notifies you that your tenancy thereof is terminated, and will end on the —— day of ——, 19—.

(Landlord's signature.)

Kentucky.—No notice to terminate lease required where the term is certain, or notice to quit is dispensed with. If a tenant fails to quit after having been given notice; or if, when his term expires upon a date certain, he refuses to quit; or if, where the agreement was to dispense with notice, he refuses to quit when landlord demands possession, he shall pay double rent from the time he should have yielded possession. If tenancy be for a year or more, and to expire on a certain day, tenant must quit on that day, unless there be a new contract to remain. If tenant holds over without such contract, he acquires no right to remain within 90 days, and landlord may repossess without demand or notice, if he institute proceedings within that time. If landlord takes no steps to repossess within that time, tenant holds for a year; after which the above relation is repeated. If the lease is for less than a year, the above relation exists, except that tenant acquires no right within 30 days, and landlord must institute proceedings within that time. If he does not, no proceedings are allowed until after 60 days from end of the term. Thirty days' notice required to end all other kind of tenancies. No particular form of notice required.

Louisiana.—By act No. 52 of 1900, "When any person, having leased any house, store, or other building, or landed estate, for a term of one or more years, or by the month, or otherwise, either verbally or otherwise, shall be desirous, upon the termination of the lease, either by limitation or non-payment of the rent when due, or any other breach of the said lease, he shall demand and require in writing his tenant to remove from and leave the same, on allowing him ten days from the day such notice is delivered; and if the tenant shall refuse to comply therewith after expiration of such delay and to remove therefrom, it shall be lawful for such lessor to cause the tenant to be cited summarily by a rule to show cause, within two days after service of such rule, to appear before any court having competent jurisdiction, in order to be there condemned to deliver him the possession of the leased premises."

Notice to Tenant.

State of Louisiana, Parish of Orleans, City of New Orleans.

New Orleans, La., ———, 19—.

M———

Please Take Notice, That you are hereby required, within ten (10) days from the serving of this notice, to surrender and deliver me possession of the —— known as No. ———— Street, in this City, which you now hold of me, as tenant under lease, pursuant to the provisions of the statute relating to the rights and duties of landlord and tenant. Act No. 52 of 1900.

(Signature.)

Maine.—At the end of the term of a written lease landlord may enter without notice and dispossess tenant; but must give 30 days' notice where tenant is one at will, holding without a written lease, said notice to expire on rent-day, when, within 7 days after its expiration, landlord must bring suit for repossession by eviction.

Maryland.—In written leases the terms govern as to notice. In Baltimore, landlord must give 90 days' notice in order to terminate a lease from year to year, and tenant must give 30 days' notice. If the lease be for a month, or any less period than a year, and tenant continues to occupy after its expiration, he holds for the term of the expired lease, and landlord must give 30 days' notice to terminate. So, 30 days' notice is required to terminate a tenancy at will or sufferance. In estates from year to year, in the State, outside of Baltimore, both landlord and tenant must give 6 months' notice in writing. In estates by sufferance no notice is required. Estates at will require immediate notice. Such notice is sufficient as to form if it is in writing and makes the intention of either landlord or tenant plain. It must be properly served.

Massachusetts.—The termination of an existing lease is governed by its contents, except where there is breach of its covenants. If tenant is holding over, he is entitled to notice equal in length of time to the period between rent-days; but if rent be payable at periods of six months, he is entitled to 3 months' notice. The notice provides that tenant shall deliver possession at the end of the quarter, month or week of the tenancy, which shall begin next after the date of the notice. In case of breach of covenants—as failure to pay rent—fourteen days' notice is required. The usual procedure for obtaining possession is by writ of ejectment.

Michigan.—Tenancy at will or sufferance terminated by 3 months' notice: Provided, that where rent reserved in lease is payable at intervals of less than 3 months, notice equal to the time between payments is sufficient. If tenant is in default of rent, 7 days' notice to quit is sufficient. In case of tenancy from year to year, notice given at any time terminates the lease at the expiration of a year from the date of such notice. A tenant holding or claiming possession adverse to landlord or owner is not entitled to notice. Hold-over lease may be a tenancy at will or sufferance. No particular kind of notice required.

Minnesota.—If tenant is holding from year to year, under a lease originally for a year or term of years, the landlord, in order to terminate, must serve him with a written three months' notice in the clear before the end of the year. If tenant is holding from month to month, a thirty days' notice in the clear is required. A three months' notice is required to terminate a tenancy at will.

Mississippi.—Where tenant is holding under a term which expires at a fixed date, landlord need give no notice to terminate lease. Where tenant is holding over under an expired lease, 60 days' notice would be required to terminate a lease, and also a year to year lease; 30 days' notice, if lease be for half or third of a year; one week's notice, if lease be for a month or week. Notice must be in writing. No particular form prescribed.

Missouri.—All leases, estates, interest in freehold or term of years, and not in writing, have the effect and force of leases, and stand at will only. No lease, estate, interest, either of freehold or term of years, or any uncertain interest of, in, to or out of any lands, tenements or hereditaments, can be assigned unless in writing. The rule is that notices to terminate leases are subject to their terms. There is no particular form of notice.

Montana.—A landlord may terminate an estate at will by giving at least one month's notice, after which, and upon three days' notice, he may maintain an action of ejectment or unlawful detainer. An estate at will may terminate without notice, on conditions broken. Covenants broken terminate a lease, and landlord is entitled to possession on three days' notice. If tenant holds over after expiration of his term, he is liable to landlord for treble rent during time of such holding over. Notice should be in writing, but no particular form prescribed.

Nebraska.—Notice by landlord to tenant to terminate a lease for an uncertain period must be 6 months in length, as at common law. Same as to tenancy from year to year. Where the term is for one year or other certain period no notice to quit is necessary, and if tenant holds over he may be summarily ejected under proceedings in forcible entry and detainer, begun after three days' notice. If tenancy be from month to month, or week to week, notice must correspond with the period named. No prescribed form of notice, but it should specify the lease dates and fully describe the property.

Nevada.—Where the lease is from year to year, and the tenant is holding over, not more than ten days' notice is necessary to deliver possession. Only three days' notice required when rents remain unpaid. The custom is to give ten days' notice when termination of a lease is desired.

New Hampshire.—If the lease be written, parties thereto are bound by its terms. Where written lease has been given and parties are holding over by mutual consent on the same terms by a verbal agreement or understanding, there would be no lease under the law, and any such tenancy may be terminated on 30 days' notice. Such notice must be in writing, must particularly state the date of its expiration, and in other respects be certain and definite in its terms. All tenancies are at will, and the rent payable on demand, unless a different contract is shown. The landlord may terminate such tenancies, or those at sufferance, by giving the above notice. Seven days' notice must be given when tenant neglects or refuses to pay rent upon demand. If rent be payable oftener than once in three months, and whether due or not, thirty days' notice is sufficient, and three months' notice is sufficient in all cases.

New Jersey.—If in the lease no term is agreed upon, and the rent is paid monthly, the tenant is entitled to 3 months' notice prior to the 1st day of April succeeding his entry upon the premises. Same notice is required to terminate a lease from year to year. If no notice has been served, and tenant holds over and pays rent, the lease holds good for another year. For violation of covenants landlord may begin eviction proceedings on 3 days' notice.

New Mexico.—The relations of landlord and tenant are as at common law. Thirty days' notice to quit is usual in leases from month to month.

New York.—If a tenant take possession under a lease which is silent as to the length of the term, but fixes terms of payment at definite periods—as monthly, in advance, or at end of the month, or quarterly—a tenancy at will or by sufferance is created, and either party desiring to terminate it must give 30 days' notice, and the date of termination mentioned in the notice must be at the end of such time as is fixed in the lease for payment of rent—month, quarter, etc. But where the lease is for a fixed term—month, quarter or year—and tenant holds over, such holding over implies a quasi consent on the part of the landlord; and the lease is construed as operative for a like term. In such case, and in every other, where the term is fixed, no notice is required to terminate. On the day of expiration of the term a summary precept to remove may issue, returnable forthwith; but if issued after the date of expiration, it cannot be returned in less than three days; and it can issue at any date unless from lapse of time or other circumstances a new lease has been created by implication. Leasing implication applies to the tenant also. If a tenant fails to pay rent on a stipulated day, he may be removed at any time thereafter by summary precept upon showing that personal demand had been made for the rent, or that he was given three days' notice "to pay rent or quit." No particular form of notice is required, but it should be in duplicate, so that a copy can be preserved as proof of service. The following form is in constant use:

To —— ——, Tenant.

Take Notice, That I hereby require you to remove from the house and premises now occupied by you, situate in the —— of ——, in the County of ——, N. Y., and described as follows: ——, on or before the —— day of ——, 19—.

Dated at ——, N. Y., the —— day of ——, 19—.

Yours, &c.,

——————,

Landlord.

North Carolina.—If the term of the lease in regard to the time thereof is fixed, then no notice is required to be given the tenant. If landlord allows tenant to hold over, and collects rent from him, then a tenancy from year to year is created, and a notice of one month must be given. No particular form of notice required, but it should be in writing.

North Dakota.—If tenant holds over, lease is renewed for same rent and time, not exceeding one year. So a lease for a term not specified is deemed to be renewed at the end of the term implied by law, unless one of the parties gives notice to the other of his intention to terminate the same at least as long before the expiration thereof as the term of the lease itself, not exceeding one month. Action for dispossession for non-payment of rent may be begun three days after rent is due, and three days' written notice to quit must be given. No prescribed form of notice required, but it should be plain, state the reason for landlord's action, be served by an adult, or officer, and supported by affidavit of service, or official return.

Ohio.—If the term of a lease is about to expire, and the landlord desires the premises, he must give at least 3 days' notice to tenant that he desires to get possession. Same notice is required where tenant is occupying under a hold-over lease, or a lease from year to year, unless there be a stipulated length of time of notice in the original lease. No prescribed form of notice.

Oklahoma.—Substantially there is no tenancy from year to year. Tenancy never becomes unlawful until after three days' notice to terminate. Wherever notice is required it must be in writing, and served on the tenant or some responsible party on the premises. It must contain the name and definite description of the property. In an action of forcible detainer the statutory words of a notice are: "For the possession of which action is about to be brought." Thirty days' notice is required to terminate a tenancy from month to month, and the same would be required to terminate a tenancy from year to year, if the same were recognized under the statutes. For shorter terms the notice is of the length of time of the term. Where the lease is for one year and the tenant holds over and pays rent, it is a lease for one additional year, and not from year to year, and requires no notice to terminate.

Oregon.—Where a landlord desires to terminate a lease because of any failure of the tenant to observe his covenants, he must give tenant ten days' notice. If there is no breach of duty on the part of the tenant, but the landlord simply desires to repossess, the length of time of notice ought to be equal to the time between the regular rent payments. No form of notice is prescribed, but it must be in writing.

Pennsylvania.—A lease should be in writing; but an unwritten lease may have the effect of a lease from year to year, not, however, to exceed the term of three years. Leases creating estates for years and at will are recognized as at common law. A tenancy from year to year is where the landlord demises to the tenant to hold from year to year, or as long as the respective parties please. A tenancy from quarter to quarter, from month to month, etc., is when the tenancy is for a short period, as for a quarter, month, or week; and if the tenant hold over, there is, as in the case of a tenancy from year to year, a tenancy from quarter to quarter, month to month, or week to week, established. Where no term is stated, the lease is from year to year. Where a lease is for a definite period and the tenant holds over, the landlord may treat him as a tenant by sufferance, and turn him out without three months' notice previous to the end of the term; but the landlord may elect to treat his tenant as one from year to year. Tenant by the month may terminate his lease at the end of a month. A lease for one year, say from April 1, expires on March 31 of the next year. A tenant is bound for the rent, even though he assigns his lease. Where there is a covenant for a re-entry on failure of tenant to pay rent, there need be no formal demand of the amount due. After service of landlord's warrant to distrain for rent, tenant has five days in which to replevy. There must be six days' public notice of sale of distrained goods given. If tenant has no goods subject to distraint, landlord must give fifteen days' notice to quit, if between April and September, and thirty days, if between September and April. The act of March 21, 1772, authorizes a procedure similar to ejectment, but speedier, to enable a landlord to recover possession at the end of a lease. Under it landlord must give notice to quit three months before his application for the remedy. The act of December 14, 1863, passed for a like purpose, requires three months' notice before the end of the term. Such notices need not be in writing unless required in the lease. As at common law, where the term of a lease is of absolutely certain duration, the landlord need give no notice to end it. He may even enter the demised premises without notice to quit, and remove the tenant's goods, provided he do no public or private wrong. But when the term is of uncertain duration, as in case of a tenancy from year to year, he must give three months' notice. And if the tenancy be from quarter to quarter, month to month, or week to week, his notice to terminate must be a quarter, a month, or a week in length. While the law specifies no particular form of notice, it should be in writing, properly served, and something like the following, which has been approved by immemorial usage:

Three Months' Notice to Tenant to Quit at End of Term.

To —— ——:

Being in possession of certain premises, with appurtenances, situate ——, which you now hold as tenant under —— (date of lease), I hereby give you notice that it is my desire to have again and repossess the same, at the expiration of your lease, to wit, on the —— day of ——, 19—.

(Landlord's signature.)

Notice to Quit When Lease Has Expired.

To —— ——:

Being desirous to have again and repossess the premises situate ——, which you hold as my tenant, and as your term for said premises expired, to wit, on the —— day of ——, 19—, I hereby give you notice to remove from and leave the same.

C. D.

Rhode Island.—The time agreed upon in a lease shall be the time of the termination thereof for all purposes. If there be no time fixed, it is a letting from year to year. Tenants by parol of land, building, or parts of buildings from year to year shall quit at the end of the year upon notice in writing from the landlord given at least three months prior to the expiration of the occupation year. Notice must be in writing, but no particular form required.

South Carolina.—Written leases are interpreted by their own terms. Others are presumed to be for one year, January 1st to December 31st, and full three months' notice must be given to terminate them. The form of notice depends on the facts of each case. Tenants may be ejected for non-payment of rent or unlawfully holding over.

South Dakota.—Length of notice to terminate depends on the character of the lease. If a tenant holds over, and landlord accepts rent, the lease is renewed for another term, not, however, exceeding one year. If tenant fails to pay rent, or otherwise breaks covenants, landlord may take action to evict upon three days' notice in writing to tenant. If a lease is from month to month or a tenancy at will, landlord must give 30 days' notice in writing to quit; but if the lease is from week to week, or fortnight to fortnight, notice only equal to the term is required. No form of notice provided for, but it should be plain and to the point.

Tennessee.—No notice of any kind is necessary by a landlord to get possession of premises held by a tenant at the expiration of the lease, either to terminate the lease or to entitle the landlord to maintain a suit for possession. Of course, this can be varied by contract so that the landlord will be compelled to give the contract notice in order to terminate a lease.

Texas.—No particular time fixed for notice to terminate a lease. Any notice in writing before or after end of term is sufficient. Even the notice to terminate need not be in writing, but must be written when before suit for forcible entry or detainer. No particular form of notice required. If lease provides for notice, the terms of lease govern. And yet it is customary in the State for landlords to give 30 to 60 days' notice.

Utah.—When the lease is for a specified term, whether written or parol, the tenancy terminates without notice at the expiration of such term. If the lease be for an indefinite time, with monthly or periodic rent reserved, the tenant continues in possession, after the end of any such, or month, or period, in all cases where the landlord shall not have, fifteen days prior to the end of such month or period, served him with notice to quit; ten days' notice required to terminate a tenancy at will. Three days' notice, when rent is overdue, to pay or surrender premises. Same notice when tenant has violated other covenants. In case of agricultural lands, where tenant holds over for sixty days after expiration of term, he is entitled to hold for balance of the year. No particular form of notice required, but it should be in writing, and served by copy personally on tenant, or some responsible person, at his place of abode.

Vermont.—Where the tenancy is from year to year it requires 6 months' notice to terminate it, so as to entitle the lessor to possession and the lessee to exemption from payment of rent. If the tenancy be at will, only reasonable notice is required—say 30 days. Notice must be in writing, and in duplicate, the landlord retaining a copy. No particular form required.

Virginia.—Tenancy from year to year may be terminated by either party by three months' notice in writing, prior to the end of any year, if it be of land within a city or town, or six months' notice if it be without. When such notice is by the landlord, it may be served on the tenant or any one holding under him; when by the tenant, upon the landlord, or his agent, according to common law. If the lease provides that no notice shall be given, none is required; and no notice is required if the lease is to end at a certain time. There is no prescribed form of notice.

Washington.—Tenancies from year to year abolished except when created by express written contract. Tenant holding over after expiration of term; or, if the term be indefinite with monthly or other periodic rent-days, he holds over after the end of any such month or period, and the landlord shall have served him with 20 days' written notice to quit, prior to the end of such month or period; or, if he holds over after receiving three days' notice in writing to quit or pay rent due; or, if he holds over after ten days' notice in writing to quit for violation of other covenants; or, if he holds over after three days' notice in writing to quit for permitting waste or violating other implied covenants; such tenant is guilty of unlawful detainer, and may be ousted by procedure in forcible entry and detainer.

West Virginia.—Three months' notice in writing required to terminate a tenancy from year to year, except where the lease specifies that no notice is to be given. Notice is not necessary when the term is to end at a certain time. If tenant is in default of rent, and has left the premises, without goods sufficient to satisfy the rent by distraint, landlord may post notice in writing requiring payment within one month. If same is not paid in that time, he may enter and repossess the premises, and is entitled to collect rent to that date.

Wisconsin.—No notice to tenant required when lease expires at a fixed date, unless lease provides for notice. Tenancy at will or by sufferance may be terminated upon one month's notice to quit; but when rent is payable at periods of less than a month, such notice is sufficient if equal to the interval between the times of payment. Where tenant neglects or refuses to pay rent, landlord must give 14 days' notice in order to terminate a tenancy at will. If tenant holds over without permission after default in payment of rent, or after any other breach of covenant, three days' notice in writing is required, either to pay rent, or remedy breach, or yield possession. Such notice must be served same as a summons. No particular form of notice required.

Wyoming.—After the expiration of a lease, the tenant becomes a tenant at sufferance, as at common law, which required in England six months' notice to terminate a tenancy from year to year, and a quarter, month, or week's notice to terminate leases of like length. Three days' notice is necessary before beginning action for forcible entry and detainer.

CANADA.

Ontario Province.—If tenancy is monthly, landlord must give a month's notice to tenant to quit; if tenancy is yearly, then half a year's notice is necessary. A lease for a specific term terminates itself, and no notice is necessary; but if landlord accepts rent after termination of a lease, that creates a new tenancy, whose terms as to time and otherwise will depend on the special circumstances of the case. Ordinarily, on an overholding on a yearly lease, a new tenancy from year to year is presumed, and a half year's notice would be required. No special form of notice is necessary, though it is preferable to have one drawn by a lawyer to insure its sufficiency.

Manitoba.—Aside from a few statutory provisions, the law relating to landlord and tenant is the English common law. A month's notice is required to terminate a monthly lease, and six months' to terminate a yearly lease. If a tenant is holding over under an expired lease, notice must conform to the terms of that lease. Proceedings for eviction generally embody a notice pursuant to the terms of the lease, and application to the Queen's Bench for eviction. No particular form of notice is required, provided it is definite and certain.

New Brunswick.—To terminate a yearly tenancy, landlord must give three months' notice to tenant; if the tenancy be monthly, one month's notice. If tenant be holding over from year to year, a three months' notice is required. No particular form of notice prescribed.

Northwest Territories.—Six months' notice is required to terminate a lease where there is no provision in the lease itself. This length of notice is rather by custom than a requisite of strict law. Same length of time of notice required to terminate a hold-over lease. This also applies to a tenancy from year to year. No particular form of notice required, provided it demands the giving up of all demised premises at the proper time. Ejectment rarely resorted to, the usual procedure being by action in court to recover land.

Quebec.—If a lease is for no special time, it is presumed to be annual, if the rent is so much per annum; monthly if so much per month, and so on. Such leases may be terminated by giving the notice of the term, whatever it may be. If the tenant occupies by sufferance, with no contract as to rent or time, it is held in the case of houses to be an annual lease, expiring on May 1, and landlord may prove the value of the occupation. Leases of houses are supposed to expire on May 1, and where such leases are written notice must be given by either party on or before the first day of February of their intention to discontinue the same, otherwise there is a tacit renewal. Leases for a specified time terminate of their own accord on the date specified; but if the tenant remain over for eight days, the lease is renewed for another period. In this case a three months' notice to terminate must be given by either party. If a written lease be for a month, a month's notice to terminate is required. No special form of notice required, provided the intention be made clearly known.

British Columbia.—All leases in writing should contain provision as to notice to terminate. If they do not, they end of themselves at the end of the term mentioned. A hold-over tenant is one at will, and can be ejected by legal process after demand for possession. Three months' notice is required to terminate a lease from year to year, unless some other agreement exists. No particular form of notice required, but it must be certain and definite.

Nova Scotia.—The relations of landlord and tenant are for the most part subject to common law regulations.
